K-State volleyball team deserves recognition

Look past football, basketball and baseball, and you will see another big-time athletic program at K-State.

Just call him the Bill Snyder of K-State volleyball.

Let's not underestimate what Coach Jim Moore has done for his program in just two years.

He took a volleyball team that couldn't buy but a couple of Big 8 wins a season, and slowly, but surely, has built a winning team almost from scratch.

On two occasions, the Wildcats even gave the No. 1-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers a run for their money.

Moore has compiled a 33-23 record in his two seasons at K-State and a 156-78 overall record in his seven years of coaching.

The Wildcat netters stand at 19-10 and have earned a bid to the National Invitation of Volleyball Coaches Volleyball tournament Friday in Kansas City, Mo., where the Cats will face 21-10 Pepperdine.

Friday will be the Cats' first post-season appearance since 1979.

The Cats even had a national player-of-the-week in Kate DeClerk.

So, congratulations Coach Moore and congratulations players. You have worked hard to come this long way and deserve everything you receive.

But to the students of K-State — take a look around.

Look past football, basketball and baseball, and you will see another big-time athletic program at K-State.

There are winners and winning programs all around — don't close your eyes and ignore them.

These teams enjoy fan support as well as the high-profile sports organizations.

Some of the best teams are unfortunately overlooked.

Just ask Coach Moore and the volleyball team.

Politicians confuse budgeting with bickering

This month, all non-essential government employees were temporarily laid off work for six days because of the partisan bickering going on in Washington.

About 800,000 people were told to take a vacation because neither side would budge enough, until Sunday night, to pass a temporary spending bill that would put them back to work.

The current temporary spending bill runs only through Dec. 15. Let's all hope we don't go through another government shutdown then.

Maybe you didn't notice. Maybe you didn't need to get a passport or social security card. Maybe you didn't go to a national park or museum.

Many Americans, however, did notice these things. Many Americans lives have been seriously inconvenienced by the ivory-tower mentality of our legislators and their total lack of understanding or concern about the lives of the common man.

Regardless of how long the government stayed shut down, it has already caused countless hardships and problems for millions.

For the very people causing the disturbance, though, there were no problems. The president, senators and representatives would have been paid no matter how long it had dragged out.

Picture this — you are the sole supporter of a family of four and have just been laid off indefinitely right before the holidays. You have no idea when your next paycheck is coming, but you have to find some way to feed and support your family in the meantime.

Your kids are screaming for Power Rangers and Barbie dolls. Try explaining to them how Christmas may be just a little late this year.

What if you had been planning to go to a national park during the shutdown? You would have had to seriously reconsider your travel plans.

The whole problem boils down to posturing for political position on both sides. Quite frankly, they all need to grow up. The American people are not chess pieces to be moved around in their game.

The president and congress should have been working 24 hours a day, seven days a week until everyone got back to work.

Instead, for six days straight it was the same routine. They would meet together for awhile and emerge with nothing worked out.

The president accused the republicans of having unwise cuts in education, technology, the environment and health care.

This all has a measure of truth to it, but Clinton has yet to provide real leadership in offering a workable alternative.

So far the democrats have been reactionary instead of proactive in countering republican proposals. Maybe this is the nature of a party that is in the minority in both houses, yet something tells me they could have done more than they have.

As for the republicans, ... well maybe I better not even tell you what I think, this being a family newspaper and all.

They have shown themselves to be totally removed from the common man and completely enthralled to big business.

They have shown themselves to be heartless when it comes to issues like the poor and brainless when it comes to issues like the environment.

It is no wonder so many Americans are disenchanted with the government. A friend of mine made a suggestion to me last week. Every ballot needs a new line stating NONE OF THE ABOVE. Let that take 60 percent of the vote.

Maybe then politicians will wake up to what their job really is for — to serve the people.

SEX CRIMES AWARENESS

Editor,

K-State, a source of higher learning, is lacking something in its basic education courses. That is a program dealing with sexual harassment, assault and rape prevention.

Although a few of the departments at K-State may offer a very short program about rape and sexual harassment in their orientation speech for freshmen, many departments fail to provide even this five minutes of education.

Taking a sexual harassment, assault and rape prevention/education course should be a requirement for all incoming K-State students.

National statistics show that two-thirds out of all college women have experienced unwanted sexual contact while with a date. Fifteen to 30 percent report they have been raped by graduation. At K-State alone, there were two reported rapes in 1994.

Statistically, for every rape reported, 10 go unreported. With statistics this high, one would think K-State should take definite steps toward dealing with this important issue.

Currently, the programs available are set up by the Women's Resource Center and are severely undermanned and underfunded.

Many other universities have a mandatory program for their students. Is K-State not concerned enough to address this issue?

Condom use protects society

For two weeks, I have had a lot of trouble getting interested in politics. This makes it rough when my deadline for this column comes around, because my normal procedure is to write about what has most recently pissed me off in the news.

Lately, though, the news has been mostly covering missing armchair heiresses and pre-pre-campaign non-news.

So, I had several of my friends write potential column topics on slips of paper, and

When I write my columns, I try to get a lot of different perspectives on whatever my subject is. I sometimes start by expanding my knowledge of the objective facts. For example, the word "condom" originally comes from the English word "cundum," supposedly named after its inventor, a 17th-century British general.

The broader term "prophylactic" comes from the Greek word "prophylaktikos," and in English, it originally meant a method of disease prevention. Whoever first used it to mean birth control must have had a pretty negative view of children.

These days prophylactics, or specifically condoms, are a method of preventing disease. Thus, slowly, I approach my point.

Anyway, in addition to gathering facts like those, I also wander around town asking people what they think about whatever I'm writing about.

I got some strange looks when I walked up to

I drew one of the slips from a hat to decide what to write about this week.

The slip I drew said "CONDOMS." It kind of makes me wonder what's on the rest of those slips.

I actually do have something to say about condoms, but I'm going to meander toward my point like a babbling brook meanders toward the sea. ("Babbling is right," my editor will probably say.)

When I write my columns, I try to get a lot of different perspectives on whatever my subject is. I sometimes start by expanding my knowledge of the objective facts. For example, the word "condom" originally comes from the English word "cundum," supposedly named after its inventor, a 17th-century British general.

The broader term "prophylactic" comes from the Greek word "prophylaktikos," and in English, it originally meant a method of disease prevention. Whoever first used it to mean birth control must have had a pretty negative view of children.

These days prophylactics, or specifically condoms, are a method of preventing disease. Thus, slowly, I approach my point.

Anyway, in addition to gathering facts like those, I also wander around town asking people what they think about whatever I'm writing about.

I got some strange looks when I walked up to people and asked, "By the way, what do you think about condoms?" But most people answered, and most of the answers were the same.

There were some colorful exceptions, including one complaint about glow-in-the-dark condoms. Apparently, even after you charge them up, they only glow for about forty seconds, and that's just not long enough.

I heard a few other fascinating stories, too, ranging from spermicide that eats through paper to a woman who found out, a little too late, that she's allergic to Nonoxonyl-9.

Most people didn't offer such interesting responses, though, but simply agreed that condoms are really, really annoying, but were a necessary evil if you were having sex outside of a monogamous relationship.

Until a few years ago, condoms were just one of the birth-control choices available, but now they are a necessary step if you want to stay alive.

If you are one of those people who thinks condoms are still a choice, you're probably not going to use them. They are a major annoyance at a time when you don't want to be annoyed.

But, even worse, you might be someone who feels condoms aren't the answer, but abstinence is.

If you are one of these people, I commend your views about your personal life. If you are one of these people, and (like the Pope) would like to take condoms away to encourage abstinence, you are out of your mind.

When I was in Italy this summer, it was really hard to find condoms. I guess I shouldn't have been surprised that they were hard to find. After all, it is a Catholic country.

It took me a week before I grasped the language enough to ask people where I could find condoms, and another two before I could understand the answer, which was usually delivered in high speed, Florentine-style Italian (in which, for some reason, they don't pronounce their C's).

In the meantime, I tried asking some of my German classmates, but I had no luck there. Some of them had brought condoms with them, but most weren't concerned about it at all.

This is insane. In France and Italy, HIV-infected blood has gotten into the blood supply, so even pure and innocent people (like nuns) might be HIV-positive, let alone whomever you might end up sleeping with.

In America, more than 1 percent of men between the ages of 27 and 35 have HIV. It's not demographically, of course, but just imagine looking around and knowing that one out of every 100 people you talk to has AIDS.

I'm all for negative population growth, but I would rather it be through educated family planning instead of vast, society-destroying AIDS plagues.

The projections of the spread of HIV, barring a cure, lead me to believe that the black plague is going to end up looking like a nasty cold that went around the office.

I'm sure that the Pope is right. Abstinence is the best way to prevent pregnancy and one good step in the prevention of AIDS.

But expecting people to be abstinent hasn't worked in the past, and it isn't going to in the future. Regardless of your personal views about condoms, you should advocate their use in society, if you still want there to be a society.

Sharing a face

Twins are only identical on the outside

Walking through campus, you see the guy you've been sitting next to all semester in history class. Smiling, you wave at him — only to have him stare blankly at you and look away.

"How rude," you think to yourself as you storm past him.

But what if that wasn't your classmate?

What if it was his twin?

For twins, adjusting to life at K-State can be a big change.

Chris and Jamie Knapp said in high school, everyone knew they were identical twins.

"Here, of course, it's impossible for people to know most of the time," Jamie Knapp, senior in elementary education, said. "All the time on campus, I'm getting stares from people like they know me, and I have no idea who they are."

"So sometimes we come off as being rude, when actually, they're seeing the other person and not the one they think they're seeing."

After 22 years, Chris Knapp, senior in marketing and advertising, said he has gotten used to being mistaken for his brother.

"It doesn't make me mad," he said. "A lot of people think it does, but even when I get called the wrong name, it doesn't make me mad. I've gotten kind of used to it. Usually, I'll just answer to either name."

Identical twins Lisa and Lori Wolf said people confuse the two of them all the time.

"We used to be in the same major, and we had all of our classes together for the first two years," Lori Wolf, senior in elementary education, said.

Lisa Wolf, senior in accounting, said during that time only one teacher gave them a problem because they were twins.

"With one teacher it was a pain, but that's the only problem we've had," she said. "That teacher thought one of us was doing all the work because it was so similar."

Although they are classified as fraternal twins, Amy and Beth Pope look enough alike for people to frequently confuse the two of them.

This problem is compounded by the fact that they are members of different sororities.

"One time, some girl came up to me and grabbed my arm and started gabbing away to me," Amy Pope, sophomore in civil engineering, said.

"It was the beginning of the semester, and I still didn't know everyone in my pledge class, and I was like 'Who the heck is this girl?'"

"I knew it had to be one of Beth's pledge sisters. I went back to the house and looked at all the pictures, and the girl wasn't one of our pledges. I felt bad. It usually upsets people more than it upsets us."

Beth Pope, sophomore in elementary education, said when the two of them worked in the same restaurant last summer, people didn't realize they were two separate people for awhile.

"Before they figured out there was two of us, they said they had just thought I was really quick," she said.

A lot of times, people are intimidated by the fact that they are twins, Amy Pope said.

"It kind of scares people," she said. "People are afraid when they know you have a twin that it might not be you, and they don't want to come up and talk to you."

"They think they'll feel stupid, but it's not like we're not used to it."

Although they look alike, the Pope sisters said it has been nice to establish separate identities while at K-State.

It had not been so easy in high school, Beth Pope said.

"In high school, we went to such a small school, we were known as the Pope twins and didn't have much individuality. She played sports, and I was a cheerleader, but we were always the Pope twins."

"Now, my house knows me, and her house knows her. That's how we're known — we're finally getting some separation."

Chris Knapp said a lot of people think he and his brother have identical personalities — not just appearances.

"Because we look alike, people think that we think and act alike," he said. "Once you get to know us, you can definitely tell there's differences in our personalities and the way we talk and act."

Chris Knapp, senior in marketing and advertising (left), and his twin brother, Jamie, senior in elementary education, pose for a picture on their 22nd birthday, Nov. 21. The two roomed with each other in Goodnow Hall their freshman year and have lived together off campus every year since.

Despite these differences, Chris Knapp said he and his brother decided to go dressed in each other's clothes one Halloween. Even their closest friends couldn't see through the charade, he said.

"One Halloween, we decided to go as the other one," he said. "People who knew us very well did not believe us even after we told them that I really was Chris, and he was Jamie. It was kind of a funny reaction because they couldn't figure it out themselves."

"We were just dressed in the other's clothes. It was amazing that they couldn't figure it out."

Saying they have a stronger bond than other siblings, Lisa and Lori Wolf said they finish each other's sentences all the time.

"I can say one word or even something like 'Oh my goodness' and she will know what I'm going to say," Lisa Wolf said.

Chris Knapp said he and his brother can tell what the other's thinking through a shared look.

"It's funny how if something happens, we can just look at each other and know exactly what the other's thinking and just laugh about it," he said.

"We know exactly what the other's thinking without even saying something. That always baffles people around us. They think that's really funny."

Beth Pope said she didn't think she and her sister had any psychic abilities, but could finish each other's sentences because they had spent so much time together.

"We know each other so well that if she starts to say something, I know what she's going to say, but it's the same as when you have a really close friend," she said.

Amy Pope said Beth Pope has learned to read her expressions over time.

"Beth knows my expressions, and she knows what I'm thinking and can tell when to leave me alone — usually," Amy Pope said.

The biggest advantage about being a twin, Beth Pope said, is always having a best friend around.

"When we were growing up, there was always someone there to play with," she said. "I've never had an imaginary friend because I had a real one."

"I've never not been a twin, so I don't know what that would be like. I'm used to always having that person there who knows me better than anyone."

Lori Wolf, senior in elementary education (left), and her sister, Lisa, senior in accounting, pose by one of the two cars they share. The other car, a Ford Mustang, has the word "DBLTBL" on its license plate.

Twin sisters Beth and Amy Pope, sophomores in elementary education and civil engineering, respectively, live next door to each other in different sororities. Although they are not identical twins, the two are commonly mistaken for each other among each other's sorority sisters on campus.

OHIO STATE BACK WINS CAMP AWARD

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State's Eddie George has won the Walter Camp Football Foundation's player of the year award. George, a 6-foot 3-inch, 227-pound senior tailback from Philadelphia, rushed 303 times this year for 1,826 yards and scored 23 touchdowns. The Camp award is selected by Division I-A coaches and sports information directors and honors the year's outstanding college player.

Talkin' turkey about Thanksgiving's sports action

Welcome back, everyone. I hope all of you had a good Thanksgiving break. In case you might have eaten too much turkey, been dismissed to the rocking chair and lost consciousness, let me catch you up on the sporting world.

Both the men's and the women's basketball teams enjoyed success during the break.

The men's team stunned the home crowd of 5,316 with a tremendous come-from-behind victory over Bradley University, 75-72.

Have you ever seen a fighter slumped in his corner, half awake? Then his trainer wakes him up with smelling salt. That is what happened Saturday. All of the Cat players' eyes were glazed over until someone woke them up in the second half. Then the team jumped on Anton Hubert's back and rode out of Bramlage Coliseum.

The women's team also enjoyed some success during our festive holiday break. Saturday night the Cats held off Lamar (and his 44-ounce drink) University for an 81-76 victory. With this victory, the Cats were crowned champions of the Commerce Bank/Wildcat Classic. Watch for the Cats to do some damage this year in the Big 8.

In case you missed it, the Chiefs played the Cowboys in another "game of the year" blowout.

But those of you who did catch the game got a real treat. Not only did you get to see a football game, there was a top-rate boxing match as well. In the blue corner, we have Deion "Prime Time" Sanders. And in the red corner, we have Lake "Erie" Dawson. This match up had more punches thrown than any Mike Tyson bout will have.

Sanders got a good upper-cut into the helmet of Dawson in the first half. After that, more punches and pushing followed between the two. In the second half, the fight turned to kick-boxing style.

Then Dawson made a crucial tag with his tag-team partner Dale Carter. Carter came in, grabbed Sanders face mask, and delivered two big kicks. One was below the belt — but the referee didn't catch it.

I feel everyone just needs to calm down and step up to a Slim Jim.

Basically, the Cowboys sent another AFC opponent home wishing they could win a "big" game against an NFC foe.

Bowl Alliance officials had their prayers answered on Saturday. With Michigan defeating Ohio State, the bowl officials got their dream match up — No. 1 Nebraska against No. 2 Florida.

Note to Ohio State coaching staff: Next time you play Michigan, you might want to consider tackling Michigan running back Tshimanga Biakabutuka. Although the Ohio State defense would have done a great job if it was a "touch" football game.

As for golf's annual event, the Skins Game — the rich get richer on one shot.

Kansas finally got picked to go to a bowl game. The Jayhawks were passed over by officials from the Alamo Bowl.

KU has got to feel like that nerdy, fat kid everyone had in their third-grade gym class — the one wearing the Husky jeans who is the last person chosen for the team. But the Jayhawks got picked by the Aloha Bowl to face UCLA, who will thump the Chickenhawks.

In case you haven't noticed, we are about 13 games into the NBA season. Oh boy! Lets get excited! Another season of traveling, dunking and fighting.

The Houston Rockets have now won the honor of having the ugliest uniforms ever. The front of their uniforms has a terrible-looking rocket on it. It looks like something from Major Astro's show. The old champions were the Denver Nuggets' old uniforms. You remember, the rainbow stripes across the front.

The Chicago Bulls are off to their best start ever, with a 9-1 record. Their game plan has been simple but successful — Dennis Rodman has only played in three games.

■ Wildcat squad prepares for first postseason bid in 16 years

Shana Newell

It certainly isn't as glamorous as the NCAA tournament, but it is most definitely a post-season tournament.

It is the NIVC Volleyball Tournament in Kansas City, Mo., and the K-State volleyball team is going there Friday.

Coach Jim Moore accepted the offer Monday to participate in the NIVC tournament. The tournament will be Dec. 1-3 at Municipal Auditorium. Twenty teams were invited to the three-day tournament, including conference opponent Oklahoma.

This will be K-State's first postseason trip since the 1979 squad went to the American Intercollegiate Association for Women Region VI Tournament. The Wildcats went 2-2 in the tournament.

The tournament is set up in a four-pool fashion, with each pool consisting of five teams. Each school will play the other four teams in the pool, with the winner of each pool advancing to the final matches on Sunday.

K-State begins play Friday morning at 9 a.m. against Pepperdine University.

Pepperdine finished the season with a 21-10 record, and has been a Top 25 team for most of the year.

The Cats begin their second match at 2 p.m. Friday against Drake University.

"Drake moved ahead of us in the district at the end of the year," Moore said. "They are obviously a good team."

Play continues Saturday morning at 9 a.m. when the Cats take on Rice University for the second time this season. K-State defeated Rice 3-1 early in the season at the Stephen F. Austin tournament.

The Cats close out pool play Saturday at 2 p.m. when they face Rhode Island.

"Rhode Island has beaten some very good teams," Moore said. "All of the teams are very good. Our pool should be very competitive."

Moore said he has tried to teach the team to approach the tournament as important. He also said there are many different ways to approach the contest, but the most important thing is to keep focused.

"It's important to have fun, play hard and do what we're supposed to do," he said. "What I tell them and what they do are two separate things. We'll just have to wait and see what happens."

Other teams in the tournament include Pittsburgh, Stephen F. Austin, Wisconsin, Fresno State, St. Louis, Sacramento State, Akron, Oklahoma, North Carolina, Villanova, Arkansas, Michigan, San Diego, Massachusetts and Butler.

It's important to have fun, play hard and do what we're supposed to do. What I tell them and what they do are two separate things. We'll just have to wait and see what happens.

Wildcats travel to WSU

Dan Lewerenz
assistant sports editor

After winning two at home last weekend, the Wildcats hit the road tonight to take on Wichita State. Tipoff is at 7 p.m. in WSU's Levitt Arena.

"They've got two very good players back in Kim Evans and Tootie Shaw," K-State coach Brian Agler said.

Evans, a 5-foot 6-inch senior guard, averaged 14.5 points and four assists last season, while Shaw, a 6' 1" junior forward, averaged 9.1 points and 6.6 rebounds.

The Shockers will open their regular season tonight against the Cats. But in two exhibition games, Evans has averaged 15 points, and Shaw has averaged 13.5. Two other Shockers, junior guard Lea Johnson and senior forward Deana Alexander, reached double-digits against the Slovakian National Team.

"There's a lot of things we don't know about them personnel-wise," Agler said. "But I know they will be a very competitive team in the Missouri Valley Conference."

Without knowing much about their opponents, the Cats will focus on their own game.

"We need to concentrating on execution on the offensive end of the floor. And we need to make sure we stay focussed on defense," Agler said.

Offensively, the Cats are being led by junior post Andria Jones, who averaged 18.5 points in the squad's first two games. Sophomore wing Brit Jacobson has averaged 14 points, and senior guard Carlene Mitchell averaged 10.5.

Sophomore point guard Amanda Chamberlain leads the Cats in rebounds per game with 6, followed by Jones with 5.5. Jones also leads the team in assists with 3.5, and Jacobson leads the Cats in steals with 2.5.

After failing to execute in their exhibition games, Agler said solid performances in the season openers helped give the Cats confidence.

"I think we feel like we're an improving team," Agler said. "And I think this is a team that will continue to improve throughout the season."

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian
Junior Kjersten Larson defends Bradley's Heather Best in the Commerce Bank/Wildcat Classic. The Cats will shoot for their first 3-0 start since 1992 tonight at Wichita State.

Soccer club places 2nd at nationals

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

Forget expectations. All the men's soccer club did was continue to win.

"My honest expectations were that we were going to be killed," junior goalie Andrew Francis said.

But the team did not lose, instead it won five consecutive matches during the Nov. 16-18 weekend and played for the championship in the National Intramural and Recreational Sports Association Soccer Tournament in Austin, Texas.

Opening round wins over Tulane, defending champion Purdue and Xavier advanced the Wildcats to the quarterfinal round where the team beat Oregon 6-4 in a shootout.

The Cats then beat Ohio State 1-0 in overtime in the semifinals.

The Cats took on Texas in the finals of the invitational tournament, a team that beat the Cats in its first game of the season, 4-0.

Club president Eric Fitzwater said he predicted the team to make it at least to the quarterfinals.

"I was expecting to get to the quarterfinals or semifinals," Fitzwater said. "I was pleased how we worked together as a team."

The team's shootout and overtime wins over Oregon and Ohio State, Francis said, are games the Cats could have easily lost.

"We were outplayed in both games," Francis said, "but we put the ball in the net when we had to." Francis wasn't nearly as hopeful as Fitzwater of the team's chances at the tournament.

"We were more than happy to be in the finals and might have been just happy watching," Francis said.

But the team wasn't just watching, and when the final seconds of the clock wound down, the team found itself a 5-0 loser.

"They came ready to play and were able to dominate the whole tournament," Francis said.

Fitzwater said the game was a case of the team holding close for a while and then letting mistakes compound themselves.

"We held our own for the first 30 minutes," Fitzwater said. "Then we had a couple calls and a couple defensive breakdowns that led to two quick goals."

Fitzwater said team members then started to hang their heads after the quick Longhorn scores hurt their confidence, which led to three more Texas goals.

"The score doesn't show how close we really played them in the first 30 minutes," Fitzwater said.

Looking at the season as a whole, Fitzwater said, it can all be considered a success for the 20-6 Cats. He pointed to a home tournament the weekend before the trip to Austin as a key for the success.

The Cats won the 17th annual Ed Chartrand Memorial Soccer Tournament Nov. 11-12 at Anneberg Park, taking the championship 6-1 over Oklahoma State.

"We worked on our play for nationals here," Fitzwater said. "We kept our intensity up from that point."

Francis said the second-place finish in Austin was the topping on the team's season.

"I was just so surprised that we did as well as we did," he said.

■ WILDCAT FOOTBALL PLAYERS RECEIVE ACADEMIC, FIELD HONORS

Four K-State football players were named to the GTE Academic All-District VII football team Monday, selected by the College Sports Information Directors of America.

Senior Matt McEwen made the team for the third-consecutive year with a 3.82 grade point average in mechanical engineering. Juniors Kevin Lockett and Jason Johnson were named for the second-straight year. Lockett has a 3.44 GPA in accounting, while Johnson has a 3.83 GPA in business administration. Senior Dirk Ochs was named to the team for the first time with a 3.22 GPA in kinesiology.

All four players are on the ballot for Academic All-America honors, to be announced Dec. 19.

Sophomore Chris Canty has been selected as one of finalists of the 1995 College Football Defensive Player of the Year award by the Football Writers Association of America. He is the only sophomore and the only defensive back among the finalists. Others include Virginia Tech defensive end Cornell Brown, Northwestern linebacker Pat Fitzgerald, Illinois linebacker Kevin Hardy and Texas Tech linebacker Zach Thomas. The award will be announced Dec. 4.

Canty was also named a first-team all-American by Football News and the FWAA and is one of three finalists for the Jim Thorpe Award, given annually to the nation's top defensive back.

Other finalists are Washington safety Lawyer Milloy and Colorado State safety Greg Myers. The Jim Thorpe Athletic Association will name the winner on ESPN's Football Awards show Dec. 8, in Orlando, Fla.

Canty has a school-record eight interceptions in the season, two of which he returned for touchdowns, and is the first Wildcat sophomore to earn first-team all-America honors.

These and other players will be honored at K-State's football awards ceremony at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 9 at McCain Auditorium. Tickets are $3 for adults and $1 for students and can be purchased by calling the McCain box office at 532-6428.

ART

Center spotlights sexuality

Associated Press

PARIS — Erotic potpourri? Pornographic hodgepodge? Sex encyclopedia? Leave the kids at home.

The mega-show on sex in art at the Pompidou Center puts genitalia on parade in a provocative display that includes Picasso's sexually explicit drawings, Brancusi's "Princesse X" in polished bronze, photos of Andy Warhol in drag, Robert Gober's "Man Coming Out of a Woman" and Tony Wesselman's "Woman With a Cigarette."

The beautiful and the kinky cohabit in this labyrinthian display of 500 paintings, drawings, sculpture, photographs, collages and installations by 100 artists from around the world.

There's everything from 'ondage and sadomasochism to voyeurism, cross-dressing, masturbation, urination and fetishism, making "Femininmasculin: The Sex of Art," a no-no for the young or faint-hearted.

Museum officials caution that some material may be found offensive, a rarity for a show designed as one of the season's main cultural events.

"The questions sex and gender, transformation and identity are among the important issues raised by contemporary artists," Joan Simon, an American art critic, said. "Until now, no one has looked into them in such a comprehensive way."

The tone is set by two French actors reading erotic literature on video screens in the main entrance. The show gets right to the point with Gustave Courbet's famous "Origins of the World," a 19th-century hyperrealistic painting showing a naked woman lying spread-eagled on her back.

Arranged thematically in five sections, the exhibition features familiar works by the century's leading artists — among them Marcel Duchamp's 1919 mustachioed Mona Lisa, Magritte's "Rape," Picasso's "Kiss," "Couple" and "Embrace."

The show, which runs through Feb. 12, made the front pages of several Paris dailies.

"Art has taken down its pants," headlined the leftist Liberation, which put an abstract vagina by Lucio Fontana — a black slit painted on white canvas — on the front page.

For art critic Philippe Dagen writing in the respected Le Monde, the show was uneven, with works that "left out sublimation ... and wavered between different types of lyricism and realism."

Indeed, there's nothing left to the imagination in Kiki Smith's "Train," a sculpture of a woman looking back at the trail of bright, red beads flowing from her vagina.

Dagen praised the works of Louise

Bourgeois, the celebrated French-born sculptor who lived in the United States, but blasted others as pure gimmicks.

Fabrice Hybert's pair of untitled swings equipped with two phalluses was a boring joke, he wrote.

Also on show are portraits of the artist Georgia O'Keeffe by Alfred Stieglitz, and compelling photographs by Edward Weston and Imogen Cunningham.

American Robert Mapplethorpe, whose sexually explicit photographs have fueled controversy in recent years, is represented by a tame photograph of Ken Moody holding an orchid and Bourgeois holding a giant phallus.

Many works carry loud and unmistakable social messages.

Sue Williams' "Try to Be More Accommodating" (1991) is a cartoon-like portrayal of a woman's mouth, eyes, nose and ear being penetrated by four penises.

Her 1992 sculpture of a naked woman is covered with boot prints, bruises and phrases commonly uttered by abusive men.

"Look what you made me do" runs up one arm, while "I think you like it" runs down the other.

Sylvie Fleury's 1994 "Wild Pair," features three pairs of silver spiked heels spray-painted on top of a collage of magazine covers showing handsome men in various stages of arousal.

One of the most amusing pieces is a photograph by Noritoshi Hirakawa, "At a Bedroom in the Middle of Night," taken April 2, 1993, in early afternoon.

The serene picture of people sitting on benches in Toyko's Inogashira Park is accompanied by a certificate signed by a couple swearing they were having sexual intercourse when the photo was taken. They are not visible in the picture.

Snoop's jury hears opening statements

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Jurors rolled their eyes and shook their heads Monday when they were told police accidentally destroyed evidence in the drive-by murder case against rapper Snoop Doggy Dogg and another man.

During opening statements, Deputy District Attorney Ed Nison said he could not produce the bloody clothes of victim Philip Woldemariam, collected by police from the carport where the 20-year-old man died.

But Nison said there was evidence the rapper, whose real name is Calvin Broadus, and co-defendant McKinley Lee were involved in the 1993 shooting.

"It was the bullet holes in Philip that caused his death and not the bullet holes in his clothing," Nison said.

Nison said previously officers destroyed the clothing, along with a bullet and empty shell casing, during a mix-up. Defense attorneys have said they plan to attack the credibility of the Los Angeles Police Department.

Broadus' attorney, David Kenner, said Woldemariam was going for a gun in his waistband when Lee fired at him in self-defense from a Jeep driven by Broadus.

Lee and Broadus, his hair pulled back in a pony tail, listened quietly during the opening statements. Kenner was scheduled to resume his remarks on Tuesday.

Nison never mentioned Broadus' celebrity, but said the defendant also was known as Snoop Doggy Dogg.

Outlining the prosecution's case, Nison said Broadus hunted down the Woldemariam and Lee fatally shot him, later concocting a self-defense alibi.

"This shooting was the result of a ... street mentality that when someone does something to you, that you have to go and take care of business," Nison said.

After the shooting, Broadus and Lee did not act like innocent men defending themselves, the prosecutor contended, noting they waited more than a week to turn themselves in to police.

Kenner said Woldemariam instigated a confrontation at Broadus apartment that led to the Aug. 25, 1993, shooting. Woldemariam, seeking to establish his gang turf, shouted taunts at people standing in front of the apartment.

Lee and Broadus later came outside and became involved in the argument, Kenner said.

Kenner also highlighted police errors, saying it was impossible to accurately determine whether Woldemariam fired his gun. The gun itself couldn't be tested because it was taken immediately after the shooting by one of Woldemariam's friends. It was confiscated about a year later by police investigating another crime, he said.

And Woldemariam's clothing couldn't be tested for gunpowder residue because they were destroyed, he said.

Police officers charged with murder

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — Two white policemen were charged with murder Monday in the death of a black businessman who suffocated during a scuffle that Jesse Jackson had branded a lynching. A third white officer was charged with involuntary manslaughter.

Two more officers, both white, escaped charges, and one of them will testify for the prosecution in the Oct. 12 death of Jonny Gammage, 31, a cousin of Pittsburgh Steelers football player Ray Seals.

Seals said he was satisfied with the charges and called for calm. But the victim's mother said all five of the police officers were mad with rage and evil and should go to prison.

Prosecutors did not follow a recommendation by a coroner's jury that all five be charged with homicide.

"I have a duty to file only those charges which I believe can be substantiated by admissible evidence at trial," District Attorney Robert Colville said.

Gammage, who managed his cousin's clothing and charity interests, died after a low-speed chase by police that led from suburban Brentwood into Pittsburgh. Two autopsies indicated that Gammage suffocated because of pressure on his chest and neck. The officers said they had to fight to subdue him.

The prosecutor charged Brentwood Police Lt. Milton Mulholland and Officer John Vojtas with third-degree murder and involuntary manslaughter. Evidence of intent would have been needed for the more serious charge of first-degree murder. Second-degree murder involves a killing committed during a felony.

Third-degree murder is punishable by 20 to 40 years in prison. First-degree murder carries up to life in prison or the death penalty.

Officer Michael Albert of Baldwin was charged with involuntary manslaughter, punishable by up to five years.

All three charged officers were released on their own recognizance.

The district attorney said a fourth policeman, Whitehall Officer Sean Patterson, did not appear to be criminally responsible, and Whitehall Police Officer Keith Henderson will be a prosecution witness.

Vojtas' attorney, Jim Ecker, said he is confident his client will be cleared.

"He and I both believe in the American system of justice," Ecker said.

Robert DelGreco, an attorney for the victim's family, said Albert should also have been charged with third-degree murder. Albert testified that he applied pressure to Gammage's shoulder and the back of his neck.

"He did this by baton, he did it by foot and he did it by knee," DelGreco said.

Last month, Jackson had called the slaying a lynching, and the Pittsburgh chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had called for charges of first-degree murder. A black leader repeated that call Monday.

"All five of them should be charged with murder because unless a strong message is sent here, it will happen again," said Jim Tarpley, a member of the Million Man March organizing committee. "We have black people here who are afraid to go outside the city of Pittsburgh."

Seals, the son of a police officer, said he would have preferred that all five officers be charged but was generally satisfied. He urged blacks to stay calm.

"To me, it was never meant to be a racial situation. This could have happened to anybody," Seals said.

Gammage's mother, Narves, said in Syracuse, N.Y., she was satisfied with the top two charges but felt involuntary manslaughter was a slap on the wrist.

Mulholland testified he began following a Jaguar driven by Gammage because it was moving erratically at night. He said the driver ignored signals to stop and went through three red lights.

Vojtas said after stopping his car Gammage got out and charged, and he, Mulholland and a third officer pulled Gammage to the ground. He said Gammage struggled so violently that the three officers and two others who arrived later sat on him and beat him with a flashlight to control him.

Albert testified he used a collapsible metal baton to push down on Gammage to force him to lie still.

Legislature may increase speed limit to 75 mph

Associated Press

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — A key senator said Monday that an overwhelming majority of Kansans who drive want the law to catch up with their cars.

Most of them are speeding on the highways, said Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, chairman of the Special Committee on Transportation.

He said he hopes the 1996 Legislature passes a bill that would allow drivers to go up to 75 mph on interstate highways in Kansas.

"They're doing it anyway," he said.

"Most people are driving 70 to 73 anyway,"

Vidricksen said he would like the speed limit to be 65 mph on the state's two-lane highways.

The committee plans Tuesday to discuss making a recommendation to the Legislature about the state's speed limits.

Speed limits were the most talked-about topic when the committee held a series of meetings across the state, Vidricksen said.

"That's probably the No. 1 issue," he said. "It's because everybody can understand it, I guess."

Congress has passed legislation that would end the national speed limit imposed more than 20 years ago. President Clinton is expected to sign it into law.

Before Congress mandated the 55 mph limit in 1973, the speed limit on Kansas interstates was 75 mph during the day and 70 at night. On two-lane highways, the limit was 70 during the day and 60 at night.

Vidricksen said he would oppose any proposal to create different speed limits for trucks and cars. In some states, the speed limit for trucks is five or 10 mph below the one for cars.

He said he also opposes a different speed limit during the day and night.

"That makes a little bit of sense to me on some of the two-lane roads," said Rep. Kenny King, R-Leon, who is vice chairman of the committee.

Mary Turkington, lobbyist for the Kansas Motor Carriers Association, said her group agreed the speed limit should be 65 mph.

She also said there should be no difference in the speed limit between trucks and cars.

"That is a major safety issue," she said. "The differential absolutely won't work."

Hill said one of the original owners went to great lengths to get a Houston Street address.

Originally, there was another house where the Mattie M. Elliot Home stands now, but she had it moved to a side street so she could build her house there, Hill said.

"Unfortunately, though, because Houston Street was in such close proximity to downtown, a lot of the homes were torn down," Hill said. "This is another reason to raise awareness and be sensitive to how we keep destroying our history."

The tour is sponsored by the Riley County Historical Society and Museum and the Manhattan/Riley County Preservation Alliance Inc., Glasgow said. All proceeds from the tour will be divided between the sponsors and used for rehabilitation and

HISTORIC HOMES CHRISTMAS TOUR

The private houses included on the tour are the Mattie M. Elliot Home, the E.A. and Uro Wharton Home, the Dr. J.D. Colt Home, the S.N. Higginbotham Home and the O.H. Halstead Home.

There will be a candlelight tour from 5 to 8 p.m., Friday and a daylight tour from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Saturday.

Tickets may be purchased for $12 at the door, or for $10 in advance at the Riley County Historical Museum, Tuttle's Antique Market or the Manhattan Town Center information booth.

No children younger than 12 will be permitted to tour the homes.

restoration purposes, Glasgow said.

"We want to work on the interior of the Wolf House, and right now we have students from an interior design class helping us," she said.

Glasgow said the Preservation Alliance will use the money to focus on the rehabilitation of the Union Pacific Depot. The group is also receiving help from students in an architecture class at K-State.

"I think the tour is very good, because it will allow people to realize that there are some really neat and fun houses worth saving, and there are many more that have potential to be saved," said Dixie West, one of the tour's participants.

"It not only gives the public a very good time, but it also shows them that old houses are very viable to live in," she said.

investigation that eventually forced Wright to resign. And it propelled Gingrich to a two-vote victory when house Republicans selected a new whip in 1989 to replace Dick Cheney after his appointment as secretary of defense.

He was elected speaker after the GOP took control of the House and Senate in November 1994.

think it'll have any impact. My view is, I'll respect his decision. We've been working together on the budget. We'll be working together on Bosnia. I wish him well."

Urged on by supporters who said he was the best man to lead the Republican resurgence, Gingrich has flirted for months with the idea of running for president, saying at times he might run, then at others that he would not, always leaving himself a little room to reconsider.

But after Powell's announcement, the speaker made it clear it was most unlikely he would run, and his most trusted political advisers were against the idea because of his heavy responsibilities in the House and also because of the giant political hurdles.

Earlier this month — before the government shutdown — 56 percent in a USA Today-CNN-Gallup poll said they had an unfavorable impression of Gingrich, more than twice the number who viewed him favorably.

First elected to the House from Georgia in 1978 after two unsuccessful campaigns, Gingrich was widely viewed as little more than an articulate gadfly with a penchant for publicity when he filed an ethics complaint against House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas in 1988.

But that complaint touched off an

"Let us lead," Clinton implored in a 20-minute speech delivered in somber tones. "That is our responsibility as Americans."

Clinton pledged that the U.S. mission — expected to last up to a year — would be limited, focused and under the command of an American general.

"America cannot and must not be the world's policemen," he said. "We cannot stop all war for all time, but we can stop some wars. We cannot save all women and all children, but we can save many of them. We can't do everything, but we must do what we can do."

"My fellow Americans, in this new era, there are still times when America — and America alone — can and should make the difference for peace."

Clinton's prime-time address kicked off an intense administration campaign to break down skepticism to what Pentagon planners regard as the most dangerous U.S. military operation since the Persian Gulf War.

Clinton tried to assuage fears that the operation would evolve into a major conflict, what critics refer to as "mission creep." Four times in the speech he described the operation in narrow terms — "limited, focused" — and said it would have realistic goals that can be achieved in a finite period of time.

The American troops would be part of a 60,000-man NATO force enforcing a 600-mile long separation zone between the warring factions. Headquartered in Tuzla in northeast Bosnia, the Americans would be deployed in a mountainous, mine-strewn countryside in harsh winter conditions.

The dangers would be compounded by the bitter ethnic rivalries and suspicions that tore apart Yugoslavia. To some in Bosnia, the NATO troops are more likely to be seen as an unwelcome occupying force than as peace-keeping saviors.

The mission comes on the heels of an agreement signed in Dayton, Ohio, last week to stop the bloodiest fighting in Europe since World War II, claiming 250,000 lives.

"We must not turn our backs on Bosnia now," Clinton said. "And so I ask all Americans — and I ask every member of Congress, Democrat and Republican alike, to make the choice for peace. In the choice between peace and war, America must choose peace."

Clinton said the Bosnia mission can succeed because the mission is clear and limited.

"Our troops are strong and very well prepared," he said.

But Clinton said no deployment of American troops is risk free and this one may well involve casualties.

Clinton had promised to seek Congress' support for the mission, but made clear he would invoke his powers as commander in chief to deploy the forces even if lawmakers resisted.

It appeared Congress would defer to the president — and let him shoulder the responsibility as well.

"The president has the authority and the power under the Constitution to do what he feels should be done, regardless of what Congress does," Dole said.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich said, "I think people are skeptical but I think they are willing to listen."

House Democratic Leader Richard Gephardt said Clinton had made a strong case for U.S. involvement.

"If America doesn't lead the world, who will?" Gephardt said.

BOSNIA

GOP gives Clinton grudging support

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With an eye on the White House himself, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole sounded a conciliatory note Monday toward President Clinton's plan to send 20,000 troops for peacekeeping duty in the Balkans.

"It seems to me that when it comes to foreign policy, if we speak with one voice, we're better off," Dole said during a campaign appearance in Milwaukee, Wis. "I want to be in a position to support the president of the United States."

But Dole remained skeptical, and others in the all-Republican Kansas delegation to Congress flatly opposed the mission.

Rep. Pat Roberts said American troops could become targets, as they were in the 1980s in Beirut, because the United States has already sided with the Bosnian Muslims, not with the Croats or Bosnian Serbs.

"I don't know how you can be a peacekeeper if you've already taken sides," said Roberts, who served in the Marine Corps. "I think we stand a real chance of getting bogged down in a political war."

Dole, the GOP front runner for the 1996 presidential nomination, said he and Clinton discussed the situation in the former Yugoslavia by telephone Sunday. Dole said the president must convince Congress and the American people of several things:

■ The mission serves vital U.S. interests.

■ The proper number of troops are going for a set length of time.

■ The expense is worth it.

■ There is a strategy to withdraw once the military objective is attained.

But, alluding to a future in which a new president may be confronted with such decisions, Dole said the commander-in-chief must have the power to order military missions without congressional assent.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum said that although U.S. interests in the region are not so clear as they were in the oil-rich Persian Gulf, the United States must provide military muscle for NATO.

"We can't disregard our commitments to NATO. They have said, 'We need you here,'" Kassebaum said. "There are some burdens of responsibility that a nation has to bear that go beyond just immediate security interests we can clearly identify."

Rep. Sam Brownback, a member of the House International Relations Committee, said he was skeptical about the peace accord and noted that the Bosnian Serbs had referred to NATO peacekeepers as an occupying force.

GINGRICH

Gingrich said he talked with family members before making the decision and wanted to focus on issues.

"There are so many exciting things we're just beginning to get off the ground," he said.

"I think that we can do things here at home that are a model for the country that other districts can look at and use."

Gingrich, 52, had said last week he was leaning toward not running, but he wanted to discuss the matter with his family one last time during Thanksgiving. In the past, he had said his wife, Marianne, would have final say on any decision.

Gingrich's statement comes three weeks after retired Gen. Colin Powell announced he would not be a candidate for president in 1996. With both on the sidelines, most Republicans believe a field headed by Senate Majority Leader Dole is solid heading into next year's early primaries, although some GOP activists unhappy with the field have not ruled out a late candidacy next year if Dole stumbles.

Dole, asked about Gingrich's decision during an appearance in Milwaukee Monday, said, "I don't

► CONGRESS

Rep. Meyers to retire, might run for Senate

Associated Press

OVERLAND PARK — Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Kan., saying she is somewhat a believer in term limits, announced today she will not seek a seventh term in Congress.

Meyers, 67, became the second veteran Republican in the Kansas congressional delegation to announce her retirement in the last 10 days. Sen. Nancy Kassebaum announced her retirement last week — and Meyers said she was leaving open just barely the possibility she might seek Kassebaum's seat.

"I am leaving the door open about 6 inches on that, and I won't say no. But I don't think that's something I'm going to do," said Meyers, whose 3rd District covers Johnson and Wyandotte counties in suburban Kansas City as well as Miami County and part of Douglas County. "I think it's the right time for both of us, but I don't think it's more significant than that," she said.

Meyers, who chairs the House Small Business Committee, said she has concerns about the GOP swing to the right but would work to keep the various factions together during her remaining year in Congress and after she leaves.

"It is a division, and I think it's a division between the more moderate group and the more conservative group.

"I'm extremely conservative fiscally. I am not so conservative on some of the social issues," she said, adding that she believes there should be a high wall between church and state.

Meyers said she intends to support Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., in his bid for the GOP nomination for president. But she said the question of whether she would serve in a Dole presidential administration is looking too far in the future.

Meyers said she believed she would endorse a candidate to succeed her next

2 men arrested in Marlatt fires

Sara Edwards
staff writer

In the early hours of Tuesday morning, two residents of Marlatt Hall were arrested for aggravated arson.

The men were arrested at 12:06 a.m. Both were released on $2,000 bond.

Timothy James Maxwell and James Kirby Bunch allegedly set fires in various places around Marlatt Hall. Staff found evidence pointing to fires while they went on rounds.

When the officer was called, staff took the officer and showed him ashes and areas burned from various fires, K-State police investigator Richard Herrman said.

Fires occurred in the sixth-floor hallway, the south stairwell of the B-Wing, the bathroom of the B-Wing and the basement of Marlatt, Herrman said.

"Information was obtained from witnesses and staff," Herrman said.

The information pointed to Maxwell and Bunch as suspects.

"They were arrested for aggravated arson. Official charges have not yet been made," Herrman said.

One of the biggest fires occurred in the trash chute Monday morning about 2 a.m. The Manhattan Fire Department and the campus police responded to the fire.

Shah Hasan, assistant director for the Department of Housing and Dining, said the primary damage was in the trash chute.

Anytime fire is detected in the trash chute, the system dumps 60 gallons of water down the chute, Hasan said. The primary cost will be the clean up from flood damage.

"At this point, we have very little information compiled. We don't have the whole picture yet," Hasan said.

Herrman said the police were still investigating witnesses and preparing the case.

"The case will go to the county attorney. Hopefully, it will be there by Thursday," Herrman said.

Aggravated arson is a felony. Those charged could get a jail sentence or a fine determined by the court, Herrman said.

There has been no motive determined in this case yet, Herrman said.

Herrman said that setting off fire alarms and smoke detectors is a criminal act.

Ambassador: National interest is key

Phil Roberts
staff reporter

Ethics are not always a part of the game in political arenas, former U.S. Ambassador David Swartz said Tuesday in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

"Ambassadors should be listened to, but many times, that's not the case," Swartz said. "Sometimes they seem to hear on their own interests, which is not ethical."

Swartz, a European and Soviet affairs expert, served in the U.S. State Department from 1967 until his retirement earlier this year. From 1984 to 1988, Swartz served as the minister counselor at the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw, Poland.

After serving under President Bush's administration he worked within President Clinton's administration. He then resigned because of an ethical policy.

"Ethics, which is a system of moral principle, and morality are interchangeable," Swartz said.

Four important problem areas factor into ethics and foreign policy, he said.

First, there is a perceived national interest that can be questioned ethically. For example, imposing economic sanctions hurts influential people the least.

Secondly, the United States lacks consistency in foreign policy.

"For example, there are many different views on what to do with nuclear weapons — whether we should disarm them or arm them," Swartz said.

Foreign policy being used for political gain is another problem that persists, Swartz said.

Finally, the main focus should be a country's national interest.

"If the perceived national interest doesn't work, then we are wasting the taxpayers' issues," Swartz said.

Belarus, which is located between Russia and Poland, was a main reference for Swartz examples about foreign policy.

"It is strategically located between Russia and Poland," Swartz said. "It is because it's one of four nuclear states for the Soviet Union."

Needing democracy

■ Officials look to improve economic conditions

If a country could bleed, Zaire would.

Political reconstruction is needed in Zaire, Kisangani Emizet, assistant professor of political science, said in a speech Tuesday. The country was bled dry and ruined by its leaders.

Emizet and Jean-Oscar

Ngalumule, chairperson of the Democracy for Zaire Foundation on democracy in Zaire, spoke about the needed democracy in Zaire.

Ngalumule, who is exiled from Zaire, is also a candidate for the presidency in Zaire.

"We need our American friends because the United States is the first country where there is freedom," Ngalumule said.

As the chairman of the Democracy for Zaire foundation, Ngalumule said his job was to inform Americans about the crisis in Zaire and its need for true democracy.

The Democracy for Zaire Foundation, located in Washington, D.C., is working to rebuild Zaire through highlighting the nation's potential. Their goals include economic development and an improved standard of living for all citizens of Zaire.

Emizet said that as inflation rises and Zaire faces political crisis, the people are looking to President Mobutu, their president for more than 30 years.

"We don't want to blame

► SUMMER SCHOOL

New program adds time for class sessions

Jeni Pruitt
staff reporter

Picking up a few extra credit hours will be easier for students, thanks to a new summer school pilot program.

Although the program, known as the 6-8-6 plus program, will not change the usual eight-week summer school, it will offer an additional six weeks of classes immediately following the spring semester and six weeks of classes before the fall semester begins.

"What is being developed is a program that sandwiches the traditional summer school program," Pat Bosco, vice president of institutional advancement, said. "Students will be given the option of staying a few weeks longer before they go to work or going to school a few weeks earlier."

The three class sessions are scheduled to overlap one another. The first six weeks of classes run May 20 through June 28, the eight-week session will run June 4 to July 26, and the final six weeks will be July 1 until Aug. 9.

John Allard, director of Continuing Education Academic Outreach, said that although the classes overlap, students will be given the option of participating in all three sessions.

The program is an effort to deal with the growing problem of backlogged classes.

"This is clearly one of the most exciting K-State responses to backlogged classes in a very long time," Bosco said. "Students will be able to accelerate their graduation date, pick up a minor, as well as compliment any educational objective in a relatively hassle-free period."

Bosco said the two additional six-week sessions were formed to accommodate current K-State students and incoming freshmen.

The sessions were designed to help continuing K-State students who need to work for the summer but can stay a few additional weeks for school and incoming freshmen who want to get an early start on their degrees and familiarize themselves with the campus.

Elizabeth Unger, dean of continuing education, said the ses-

DEMOCRATS, REPUBLICANS BEGIN TALKS TO BALANCE FEDERAL BUDGET

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eleven months in the making, yet inevitable from the start, negotiations between the Clinton administration and Republican lawmakers about conflicting visions of how to balance the federal budget are ready to begin.

Both sides say talks are likely to begin this evening in the Capitol on how to eliminate deficits, the chief goal of Republicans who took over control of Congress in January. The two sides have agreed to seek a plan to balance the budget by 2002, but they disagree over how much to carve from Medicare and a host of other social programs, making eventual agreement far from certain.

"I'm an eternal optimist," House Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio, told reporters Monday evening after GOP leaders discussed strategy. "But we're running out of days."

Republicans have set Dec. 15 as the target date for striking a deal and sending it to President Clinton for his signature. That is also the expiration date of the temporary measure that is financing large chunks of the government because of Congress' failure so far to finish much of the budget work for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

SPACECRAFT SCHEDULED TO COLLECT COMET DUST SAMPLES IN 2004

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — NASA plans to send a spacecraft to within 62 miles of a comet to capture dust samples and bring them back to Earth for analysis.

"This is the first time since the Apollo program in the 1970s that a sample of something interplanetary will be collected and returned to Earth," Ken Atkins, Stardust project manager at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, said Monday.

The spacecraft, Stardust, will be launched Feb. 15, 1999, and will hurtle through the solar system toward a flyby of the comet Wild-2 in January 2004. It could come as close as 62 miles, Atkins said. Stardust's dust collector will act like a catcher's mitt.

The collecting device will contain an aerogel, a porous, high-tech material made from silica, the same substance found in sand. The aerogel can slow these particles down appropriately and capture some of the smaller particles ... nice and softly, Atkins said.

According to the plan, a return capsule bearing the comet particles will parachute to a dry Utah lakebed in January 2006.

Atkins said that unlike many unmanned missions that carried expensive instruments into space and relayed data back to Earth, the $199.6 million

Stardust mission will actually bring the mountain to Mohammed.

Hundreds of scientists will be able to analyze the dust.

Wild-2 is particularly intriguing because it was in a long deep freeze far out into the solar system.

But a recent close encounter with Jupiter modified its orbit and brought it closer to the sun, Atkins said.

Donald Brownlee, an astronomy professor at the University of Washington in Seattle and head of the Stardust mission team, said scientists believe comets contain rocky materials, ice and some organic substances.

SEVERAL SERBS REJECT PEACE

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — For black marketeers, local warlords and thousands of refugees, the prospect of an imminent end to Bosnia's war is not something to cheer. They are among those who stand to lose when peace comes to Bosnia.

Serbs around Sarajevo have been the most vocal in rejecting the peace deal initiated last week by the presidents of Serbia, Bosnia and Croatia.

The accord would reunite the besieged Bosnian capital under governmental control, giving Serbs the choice of fleeing or submitting to the forces they have fought for more than 3 1/2 years.

Aggrieved army or paramilitary units could be tempted to harass units of the 60,000-member NATO force, which will include about 20,000 U.S. soldiers.

But there also are many on the government side for whom peace doesn't pay.

DOLE BLAMES HOLLYWOOD MOVIE

NEW YORK (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole and police officials laid some of the blame on Hollywood for the burning of a subway token booth that critically injured the clerk and resembled scenes in a new movie.

However, there have been at least nine similar attacks in the past five years in the city, long before "Money Train" opened this weekend, transit Chief Kenneth Donohue said Monday.

In those cases no one was seriously injured, little damage was done and the robbers were arrested. In a 1988 case, a token-booth clerk died after a firebombing.

Still, Dole and some officials contended that the new movie could have provided the blueprint for the two men who squeezed a flammable liquid into a subway token booth on Sunday and ignited it.

The booth blew up, burning Harry Kaufman on more than 80 percent of his body.

Job market looks good for fall graduates

Karrin Thomas
staff reporter

December graduates have a good job market awaiting them, according to the National Association of College Employers.

The association reports salaries have gone up from 1 to 3 percent since last year, and most areas of the job market have a strong demand for college graduates.

One of the strongest demand areas is electrical engineering, said Marcia Schuley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services.

"We have seen a realignment from downsizing in large companies to a comeback in areas such as electrical engineering in small- and medium-sized companies," she said.

The communications and software industries have helped to produce demand, she said.

The service sector industry is another strong demand area, Schuley said.

"The service sector takes up so much more than food and cleaning," she said. "A big area is consulting on just about anything, like setting up computers."

Starting salaries in the service area range from below $20,000 a year to above $40,000. Pay often depends on degree and experience, she said.

"Most employers are looking for graduates with prior experience through internships," Schuley said.

Mark Esfeld, career counselor and liaison for agriculture and education at Career and Employment Services, said the job market for graduates in all areas of agriculture was strong.

"I'm seeing lots and lots of agriculture positions. It looks very positive at this point," he said.

Salaries in agriculture are comparable to past years because most companies research and follow industry standards for salaries, he said.

Hiring in the area of education is primarily done in the spring, Esfeld said.

Former K-State student to perform comedy act locally

Jennifer Taylor
staff reporter

With finals right around the corner, you might be in desperate need of some laughter. If so, head on over to Silverado Saloon on Wednesday.

K-State graduate and professional comedian Johnny Wayne is headlining at the club.

"I'm excited to be coming back to Manhattan.

I'm hoping some friends come out, maybe some teachers to see what they created. They may be happy, or they may be sad," Walker said.

The last time Walker was in Manhattan was in 1992.

Walker graduated from K-State in 1985 with a degree in theater. While he was at K-State, he got his first taste of performing when he joined the Complex Improvisational Theater.

The Complex Improvisational Theater was made up of students in the theater department who performed around town and the state and eventually began shows in Colorado.

Walker stayed with the group for a year after he graduated, then moved to Colorado and began to do stand-up comedy around the state.

"Doing stand-up was an easy transition because I already had the connections at the clubs from being with the group," Walker said.

Since then, Walker has traveled around the United States performing his stand-up act. His favorite place to perform is at the Improv in Las Vegas.

Walker also performed in Europe and Asia while he was on a USO tour.

"The USO tour was a lot of fun. It gave me a chance to see lots of the planet," Walker said.

Walker has also appeared on HBO's "Comic Relief for the Homeless."

"I travel a lot. Out of 365 days, I'm on the road about 250," Walker said.

Walker bases himself in Colorado and San Francisco. His influences include Richard Pryor, Monty Python and Bugs Bunny, in that order.

Walker said his show would be playful and uniquely likable, and some K-State students agree.

Walker's background is hoped to draw students and faculty from K-State.

"I'm going to go see him. I think it's neat that he graduated from K-State and he's coming back," Brandy Payne, senior in elementary education, said.

"I think I'm going to go. My friend saw him at Stanford's in Kansas City one time, and he said it was pretty good," Kent Hamilton, senior in geophysics, said.

Lafene should raise fees by semester, not visit

Frequent Lafene patients would lose money quickly at $10 a visit.

Lafene Health Center's system of payment came under consideration again Monday night at a meeting of the Student Senate Privilege Fee Committee.

Members of the Student Health Advisory Council and the Privilege Fee Committee discussed a proposal to increase the $70 full-time students now pay for access to Lafene to $85 per semester.

Along with this increase, the proposal called for a decrease in office hours and an increase in the cost of services such as X-rays and laboratory work.

Because of a decrease in fees, Lafene has already had to cut its staff.

If Lafene is to maintain its present quality of service, the center must generate revenue somehow.

The alternative to this proposal would be to initiate a user fee of $10 per office visit to offset Lafene's operating costs.

The logical choice of these options would be to go with the original proposal of raising Lafene fees to $85 per semester.

As the semester progresses, funds become increasingly sparse for most students, especially those students who depend on loans or grant that are distributed in lump sums at the beginning of each semester.

It would be more convenient to pay an extra $15 at the beginning of the semester when students are already shelling out $1,000.

Frequent Lafene patients would lose money quickly at $10 a visit.

Although some students might never set foot in Lafene and think they would be cheated by this fee increase, they must remember that services they use are subsidized by every fee-paying student.

FINALS WEEK

Finals are breathing down my neck, and so is my editor. So in the interest of getting this done and hitting the books, (if you believe I have some lovely beachfront property in Arizona to sell), I'm going to slam this thing out and let us all go do something else. Here it is, the annual Finals Guide — culled from my considerable experience as a college student.

Most of it is basic stuff, but sometimes it needs to be said. Don't thank me — it's what I'm paid to do.

For freshmen — the upcoming weeks are crucial. If you are flunking anything at all, throw yourself at the mercy of the instructor, and get out of that class.

Don't try to pull any heroics during the final. It's easier to take the W and retake the class next semester. The odds of getting an A on the final are so tiny, bookies won't even touch them. Plus, the F will follow you around for eternity.

For everyone else — get lots of sleep.

If you've been using your textbooks as coasters, now is probably a good time to get the shot glasses out of the way and actually read them.

Remember to check the syllabus. Sometimes the test is not actually in the same room as the class. I have never been given a good reason for why this is.

I think the administrators do this for their own amusement, but none of them will admit it.

Try not to look too nasty when walking around campus. Make eye contact. If you can't look pleasant, at least look non-threatening.

Eat carbohydrates. Potatoes and pasta are good. These are supposed to build up energy for the long haul. If you don't feel energized, at least you won't be hungry. Remember, Ramen noodles never spoil, so stock up.

If you don't do anything else during finals week, remember to take showers and change your underwear.

It's a small thing, but those around you will be grateful.

If, for some reason, you can't stand to read and your eyes won't focus anymore, here are few things you can do to break the tension.

■ We haven't had a streaker yet this semester, and it's about time. Anyone who feels the urge to blow off some steam should feel free to let it rip. I think a female streaker would be a novel idea. If you want, call the Collegian at 532-6556, and we'll send a photographer your way.

Just to make it interesting — I'll give $5 to the first streaker to do the twist with me outdoors.

■ Go see the library. I don't mean actually go in — it's still a wreck, but take a walk around. The outside is starting to take shape, and it's looking pretty good. See our tuition at work.

■ Go to Jon Wefald's office with several of your friends, and sing the Philosopher's Drinking Song to him. I have no idea if he likes Monty Python; maybe this will give us some clue.

I have the words and music if anyone needs them.

■ Wink and lick your lips at all your instructors. Watch them get nervous; it's fun.

Good luck, and remember, if you must wig out in public, be creative about it.

► HELP FOR UNITED WAY

Editor,

On behalf of the KSU United Way Coordinating Committee, we would like to thank you for your generous support of the 1995 campaign.

We are writing to remind those of you who may have put the letter aside that you still may make a contribution to the 1995 campaign. Frankly, the contribution level both on campus and in the community is down significantly this year, and the campaign has been extended through Dec. 1.

Participating is simple. If you need a pledge card, please do not hesitate to contact either one of us at 532-6269 or mail your contribution to Box 109, Dykstra Hall.

Thank you for your continued interest and support in the Riley County United Way.

Editor,

As faculty senators, we want to thank the students who attended the Nov. 14 meeting of Faculty Senate. We particularly want to thank Jay Goodwin for his statement at that meeting. Even though we may have disagreed with the content of his statement, we appreciate his participation, as well as, that of other students and hope students will feel welcome at future meetings of Faculty Senate.

► CAMPUS TRAFFIC SAFETY

Editor,

I am writing this letter to address the issue of the dangerous traffic on the campus of K-State. This is a serious problem and one that should not be taken lightly.

I became aware of the problem while doing research for a campus issue speech.

I saw the number of vehicles that drive down the streets of the campus each day, and there is an appalling number of vehicles that drive through campus for no real purpose.

Having an open campus is a very dangerous thing. There have been 10 reported cases of pedestrian and vehicle accidents on the campus during the last two years.

Compare that to the University of Kansas, which is a walking campus, it reported only one pedestrian/vehicle accident in the last year.

Students cannot walk across the campus without coming into contact with at least five to seven vehicles each day.

This means students must either wait for a car to safely pass the street or make sure the driver sees them before they proceed across the street. On the K-State campus the contact is about seven cars per day.

The dangerous restrictions that are placed around campus are not monitored. The areas for service only become congested with students daily dropping friends off or waiting on people to take them home.

The perfect solution would be to forbid all traffic on campus, but I know that this is impossible. Emergency vehicles need to be able to get into the campus, and handicapped services, K-State personnel and some faculty must be able to get into parts of campus.

The solution to this problem is to have restricted traffic on campus.

The campus should not have to be completely shut down, but the heart of campus should be freed of unneeded traffic.

Emergency vehicles, handicapped services, personnel and some faculty could be allowed on campus. This could be done with a pass system.

The traffic from Lovers Lane to Petticoat Lane and from Vattier Street could be easily monitored with information/service stations from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily.

The six booths could be placed at the entrance of the campus, eliminating the need for extra patrol.

The booths could provide information for visitors and people unfamiliar to the campus. This would also be the outlet into the restricted areas.

The pass to get into the campus would be placed in the lower left-hand corner of the front window where it could be easily seen by a service person.

The project could be done by students on the work-study program. This would give more students an opportunity to work on campus and a chance to interact with the public.

The money spent would be well worth the safety preserved on the campus.

I hope this letter has made you realize the need for the walking campus issue to go through and take effect as soon as possible.

A student's life may depend on it.

Speechwriters steal credibility from politicians

In almost every aspect of society, people have many ways of judging one another.

We gain our impressions and thoughts of those we meet by their actions, what they say and how they carry themselves.

Perhaps the most crucial tool used in getting acquainted with a person is what they say.

This is critical in various circles of society; one tool that is most pertinent to the country, however, lies in what our politicians say to us. Their speeches are important and carry far beyond the election year.

This is why I find it disheartening that many politicians hire other people to write their speeches.

To be sure, the individuals in question would certainly tell their speechwriters what particular beliefs on important topics they wish to convey.

However, as is the case with many politicians, the words we hear them speak are not their own.

Over his Thanksgiving break at Martha's Vineyard, President Clinton wrote the speech he delivered to the nation Monday night concerning the U.S. military's peacekeeping role in Bosnia. A phone-in poll taken by KMBC-TV showed the callers had an 80-percent disapproval rating of the president's decision.

His speech was somewhat flat. It made several points about different sides of his argument in numerical order, leaving a portion of his audience confused over what point covered what exact area.

His speech was uninspiring; he did not sound like the commander in chief. He sounded like he has through much of his presidency — an uncertain man.

During his campaign for the presidency, he had a staff of speechwriters, as he has had for much of his term in the White House. Part of the benefit of writing one's own speeches is the rehearsal for delivering it begins with the writing and the revising. With something as important as a national address, it was a wise decision to write it himself.

However, because he isn't used to writing his own words, he was out of practice, and the results will hurt his re-election bid.

How can people say they distrust politicians or that politicians lie when the words they speak to us are not their own? Granted, the ideas are important, but so are the words that convey the message.

If a politician doesn't write his or her own words, then there is a certain lack of personal responsibility attached. When people create something, they attach personal conviction to it.

The work of another is just that — someone's conception. No matter how true it might ring or how much wisdom it carries, it doesn't hold the weight of the original speaker.

It is ironic that with the conservative rallying cry for a return to traditional values, a return to traditional intellectualism doesn't follow.

Many of the speeches hammered out by politicians in the Congressional pulpit were written by professional speechwriters.

Henceforth, the conviction of one nameless writer has become the conviction of a political collective.

Regardless of the call for a return to traditional values in America, there must be a return to the traditional style of writing political rhetoric.

If it is a burden to compose a speech, then the reins of office and the responsibilities that come with such demands are too heavy, too. When politicians speak the emotion and assurances of others, then the public doesn't see the true individual.

They see a shadow emanating from the local soapboxes, Congressional floors and the Oval Office itself.

a new BEGINNING

A K-State student escaped abuse from her mother by being informally adopted.

story by Rachelle Harkness

Drugs, prostitution and abuse strike too close to home for a K-State senior.

Maggie Otvos, senior in theater, is originally from California, where she lived with her mother, Patti, until she was 13 years old.

During those years, the clothes, food and the homes she shared with her mother were a result of Patti's free-loading off of drug buddies and people Patti met at bars.

"I never saw her sober. She was either wasted or hung over," Maggie said.

Maggie said she remembers thinking Patti had a lot of boyfriends.

"When I got older, I realized the reason we had anything was because Patti was a prostitute," Maggie said.

At one point in time, Maggie said her mother tried to change.

"When I was 10, my great-grandparents sort of rescued us and took us to San Diego. Patti got a job, and we lived with them," she said. "After we moved, I remember Patti kind of announcing she was off heroin."

Maggie said her great-grandparents were co-dependent with their granddaughter. Time after time they were there to help Patti find a job and a place to live.

But every rescue proved to be a failure. Patti would return to her old habits each time, Maggie said.

Maggie's biological father, Allan, tried to gain custody several times throughout her childhood.

"But Patti was always too much for him to handle," she said.

When she was younger, Maggie said she loved to spend time with her father, but as she grew older she became resentful.

"I remember calling him to ask him if I could move in with him. He thought that Patti and I were having normal mother-daughter problems," Maggie said.

The mother-daughter problems increased in severity as Maggie entered her teens.

"I had visible bruises all over me, all the time," Maggie said.

Patti's drug use was prevalent as Maggie grew older and verbal attacks were a normal part of their mother-daughter relationship, Maggie said.

"I remember our final 'falling out,'

she said.

Patti returned home while she was obviously high, Maggie said.

Maggie, who was 13 years old, was talking on the phone with her best friend, Stacey Campbell-Lopez.

"She was screaming at me because the dishes weren't done. Then she grabbed my hair and dragged me across the house," she said.

Maggie dropped the receiver, and Stacey listened to the discourse from the other end.

"I was scared to death, and that's when I knew I had to get out. Somehow, all the anger I had inside for Patti gave me the strength to just smack her," Maggie said.

After hitting the corner of the kitchen table, Patti fell to the ground.

"I thought I killed her. I was hysterically screaming, 'I killed her, I killed her' to Stacey on the phone. All of a sudden, I turned around, and there she was. She was trying to strangle me," she said.

Maggie hung up the phone and met Stacey's father, Allan Campbell, outside. The Campbells took temporary custody of Otvos.

Maggie said the only thing she remembers is Allan Campbell yelling, "You'll never get your daughter back."

After several attempts trying to live with the Campbells, Maggie was legally forced to move back in with Patti.

Kathy Campbell, Stacey's mother, said not having any legal recourse hurt the family.

"Maggie and Patti had real bad fights. We probably didn't realize at the time how bad they were," Kathy Campbell said.

"We didn't have a lot of control, because Patti would never consent to legally allowing us to have custody over Maggie," Campbell said.

The Campbells owned apartments nearby in California where they would later allow Patti and Maggie to live after Patti was released from a rehabilitation center.

"The last straw was when I saw her shooting up with heroin," Maggie said.

Shortly after that, Maggie moved in with the Campbells. Making the decision to "adopt" Maggie into their family was a decision every member in the family had a part in making.

"When we made the decision, we sat down as a family and discussed it.

MIKE WELCHMANS/Collegian

Maggie Otvos, senior in theater, spent the first 13 years of her life with her biological mother, a prostitute and drug user.

We all had to realize that we were making a commitment. Good or bad, we had to stick it out together, and we agreed on taking Maggie as a family," Kathy Campbell said.

Patti never gave legal consent for the Campbells to adopt Maggie. She continually harassed Kathy for stealing her daughter.

"Patti would show up drunk at the door screaming at me for taking Maggie or call with abusive phone calls," she said.

Maggie began high school with a new family. Her whole life changed, including her relationship with her best friend, Stacey.

"We were more like sisters. We were jealous of each other at school and at home," Stacey said.

Competing for Kathy and Allan's attention became intense. Stacey said she tired of Maggie quickly.

"I got tired of her talking about how great mom and dad were. I got really sensitive to how they were treating her and how they were treating me. I would take everything overboard," Stacey said.

The road wasn't always easy for the Campbells to raise Stacey and Maggie together.

"We went through a lot of trauma. We had to kick Maggie out of the house once, and I felt so bad because once again she was being rejected. We loved her very much, but it didn't give her the freedom to misuse the rules we set for her," Kathy said.

The Campbells and Maggie were able to hold on to what they had as a family.

"We only had one year that was bad. By the time we were seniors, we were best friends again. My parents said something to me when we had an argument. They reminded me that I was the one who asked for Maggie to live with us, so working at the relationship was my responsibility, too, and turning my back on her wasn't fair. It really made me think about things," Stacey said.

Things eventually turned around for Stacey, and they grew to be closer than they ever were before.

"Maggie and I have a great relationship, and we always will," Stacey said.

As far as the Campbells are concerned, they, too, grew to be closer than ever.

"Sometimes I wish there was more we could do for her. I find myself wanting to make up for her past. We talk about once a week now, sometimes twice. We have a great relationship," Kathy said.

The Campbells accepted Maggie as their daughter, and Maggie became a Christian. Between her parents and God, she excelled through high school and is now about to graduate from K-State with a theater degree, Maggie said.

She has a good relationship with her biological father and grandparents but hasn't talked to Patti for some time.

In December 1993, Maggie learned that Patti had acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

She is now in the final stages of her disease and is living homeless in New Mexico.

Finding biological parents not easy

Rachelle Harkness
staff reporter

Alisha Chapman always wondered whether she was adopted, but she didn't know she was until high school.

"I always wondered, just because it was so obvious. I look nothing like my parents," Chapman, senior in business, said.

Chapman said she remembered having a fight with her adoptive mother and then asking whether she was adopted.

After finding out that she was, Chapman said she was angry. But now she is just curious about her biological mother.

"I just want a picture of her. I don't need a relationship with her," Chapman said.

Cheri Puvogel, senior in management, satisfied some of her curiosity when she found a picture of her biological mother in a high-school yearbook at a Kansas City library.

"It was incredible just to see a picture of her. I look exactly like her. I'm sure the library won't appreciate it, but I cut her picture out," Puvogel said.

Puvogel was adopted at birth and began the search for her parents with records given to her adoptive parents by the adoption agency.

Although the records did not include names, they did list professions and medical histories. The documents also reported that Puvogel's biological parents were married at the time of birth and the father wanted to pay for all medical expenses. However, the adoption agency paid for Puvogel's expenses.

"I don't necessarily want a relationship with her. I'm just curious to know who she is," Puvogel said.

Puvogel has now reached a roadblock in her search.

"I have found out that she has an unlisted number in Kansas City, so basically, I'm kind of stuck as to what to do next," Puvogel said.

Charlice Magnuson, senior in design, is also adopted but has not begun the search for her biological parents.

She said she has always known that she was adopted, but it is not a subject she and her adoptive parents discuss.

"My mom was a nurse in Kansas City. She knew a doctor who had a 16-year-old pregnant patient. Somehow, he connected the two of them. That is really all I know. I think part of the reason why we don't talk about it much is because I have a younger brother who is not adopted," she said.

Magnuson said she wanted to pursue a search for her biological mother someday, but she too only wished to know her out of curiosity.

"All she is to me is blood," Charlice said.

OK, kids, we did this once already for the football season, and now your Uncle Todd is back for basketball season to have a little Session of Wisdom with his children of K-State.

Uncle Todd's first words of wisdom are to ignore what all the preseason basketball publications say because things here at K-State are not nearly as bad as those publications make it sound.

TODD STEWART

This team will not finish last in the Big 8 again.

Coach Tom Asbury has recruited too much talent and too much size for this team not to improve. Add in returning seniors Elliot Hatcher and Tyrone Davis, and the Wildcats could have the top 1-2 punch in the conference.

Uncle Todd says anyone who claims Iowa State has a better team will be proven wrong come Jan. 6 on ESPN.

But your Uncle Todd is even so hesitant to say the Cats will stop at seventh place.

Don't act all surprised if on the last day of the regular season the Cats stand in fifth place, also ahead of Colorado and Oklahoma State.

Kids, these Cats are every bit as talented as those Buffaloes and Cowboys and could give them more than either team can handle.

As for individuals, my children, K-State is blessed with some incredible individual talent that should entertain Bramlage fans all season long.

Hatcher and Davis are the unquestioned leaders of this squad and will be the ones Asbury goes to in the crunch. But kids, if you want the Cats to be successful, don't hope for 40 points per game from Hatcher and Davis — expect it.

The question marks on this team are, naturally, the newcomers.

Leading the freshmen is a man among men in forward Manny Dies of Wichita.

He has already brought down multiple backboards in practices and will be the most powerful small forward in the Big 8.

Not to mention he is the scariest and most intimidating.

In addition to Dies, center Gerald Eaker and guard Anton Hubert will lead the class of newcomers.

Eaker should give Davis some much-needed relief in the post, while Hubert will give the Cats the outside shooting the team desperately needed last season.

With Hubert's 39-inch vertical jump and long-range shooting, mark this down, kids, Hubert will be a fan favorite by the end of the season.

Add in solid play from rising star Mark Young, versatile Paco May and already fan-favorite Aaron Swartzendruber, and things will be just fine here in Manhattan.

Asbury is a solid coach, a great recruiter and a good motivator, and he will make sure that his team comes to play every night.

So, kids, rest easy in Wildcat land, and believe your Uncle Todd when he says things are not as bleak as some people would like you to think.

These Cats are going to be just fine, thank you very much.

Respond to Todd via e-mail at (toddvs@ksu.ksu.edu).

1-0 Cats to battle intrastate rival

■ Cats face 1-2
Emporia State at 7:05
tonight at Bramlage

Collegian Staff

Consistent play from the point guard position is a must for every team, and in its first game without starting floor general Elliot Hatcher, K-State wasn't hurt by the fact that it was left with only one true point guard.

"I was reasonably pleased with the play at point guard," Coach Tom Asbury said Tuesday.

In the Wildcats' 75-72 overtime win over Bradley University Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum, Aaron Swartzendruber started the game with Brian Gavin and Anton Hubert also seeing action at the position.

As of Monday afternoon, Asbury wouldn't say who would start at the point when K-State faces Division II Emporia State at 7:05 tonight at Bramlage.

Swartzendruber, a sophomore, played 14 minutes in his first career start, scoring five points. Gavin, a senior, played 22 minutes with four assists and four points, while Hubert led the charge at the end of the game, scoring eight points in the final 30 seconds of the second half to force the extra session.

"Aaron played extremely well at times and made some questionable decisions at times, did a good job defensively, and led the team pretty well," Asbury said.

"Brian did a great job defensively, and we used Anton Hubert at the point, and he did a nice job, especially at the scoring end late in the game."

"As far as a prototype point guard, Aaron, aside from Elliot, is the only other point guard in our program with Chris Griffin being redshirted," Asbury said.

Hubert, who played the bulk of the second half and overtime at the point Saturday, has been a shooting guard at every stop before arriving at K-State this season, but his size dictates he will play some point guard this season and more next season when Hatcher departs.

"Anton is a guy we need to groom to play some there," Asbury said.

"He's a shooter, but size-wise, he'll play some point, and he knows that."

Although Hubert nailed three three-pointers and 13 points in his first game in purple, he's still hampered by an injured knuckle on his non-shooting hand which he suffered during the preseason.

"He's still got a little soreness," Asbury said.

As a team, Asbury found some things that needed work before the Cats play three games in the next six days.

"Our shot selection needs to improve, certainly sustaining our defense for an entire game and decision making as much as anything," Asbury said.

Questionable shot selection at certain points in the game Saturday hurt the Cats, but it didn't cost them the game.

"There were only a half dozen questionable shots we took, and none of them went in," Asbury said. "And in a one-, two-, or three-point game, it looms important, and when you're in an overtime game, it's critical."

Coming back from an 18-point deficit against Bradley Saturday was good for the Cats, Asbury said.

"I think it's good that we got a valuable lesson that we can be down, and if you hang in there and keep battling, you can come back and win a game against a quality team," Asbury said. "Bradley is at or near the caliber of a lot of Big 8 teams."

Emporia (1-2) has no starter taller than six-foot-seven and is led by senior Rob Layton, who's averaging 19 points a game and nine rebounds, and freshman Chris Henry (17.3 points).

The Hornets went 6-19 last season under Coach Ron Slaymaker, who is in his 26th season at Emporia.

The Hornets have started Layton, Henry, Scott Harkness, Lamont Buntion and Luther Joiner in each of their games with Mitch Sharon, averaging 20 minutes a game off the bench.

"We got some tape on them," Asbury said.

"We'll be ready."

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Power forward Tyrone Davis and the Wildcat basketball team take on Emporia State tonight at Bramlage Coliseum. The 1-0 Cats are coming off of a season-opening 75-72 overtime win last Saturday against Bradley.

► KC CHIEFS COULD CLINCH AFC WEST TITLE WITH WIN ON SUNDAY

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer seemed not to know Tuesday that his team could clinch the AFC West by winning at Oakland on Sunday.

"You mean it?" Schottenheimer asked Tuesday at his weekly news conference when told that the combination of the Raiders' loss to San Diego Nov. 27 and a Chiefs win Sunday would give the Chiefs the division title.

"I might mention it to the players. But I don't want to spend all week dwelling on it. But certainly I'll mention it."

The Chiefs began a three-game road trip that takes them to Oakland and Miami by losing at Dallas on Thanksgiving. But they still rule the AFC West with the help of San Diego's 12-6 upset of the Raiders on Monday.

Kansas City (10-2) leads Oakland (8-4) by two games, and has already beaten the Raiders once in one of the Chiefs' three overtime victories.

"I would rather not talk about it," Schottenheimer said. "We still have not accomplished any of the objectives that we set out to achieve. We've got our own agenda. We can't count on anyone else to do it for us."

"We're not counting on someone else to do it for us."

► NCAA UNDER FEDERAL INVESTIGATION FOR POSSIBLE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ATHLETES WITH LEARNING DISABILITIES

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal investigators are trying to determine whether the NCAA discriminates against student athletes with learning disabilities.

Under scrutiny are the NCAA rules designed to prevent colleges from giving athletic scholarships to students unprepared to handle college academic work. The Justice Department's civil rights division wants to know if the rules are unfairly applied to learning-disabled students.

Discrimination against such students would violate the Americans with Disabilities Act.

"We received a complaint within the past month, and we have opened an investigation," John Wodatch, chief of the division's disabilities rights section, said Tuesday.

The complaint came from the parents of an Illinois high-school swimming star, Chad Gaden, 17, a senior at Naperville North High School in suburban Chicago. Gaden was a state swimming champion last year.

"This is by no means a cut-and-dried violation," Wodatch said. "We are trying to understand how this policy works and whether it violates the disabilities act."

The NCAA requires minimum scores on standard college entrance exams and minimum grade-point averages in at least 13 core college preparatory courses for students to be eligible for athletic scholarships.

The NCAA told Gaden he did not have enough college-preparatory courses to be eligible to accept a school-paid recruiting visit to a college before Nov. 15, according to the Washington Post, which first reported the story.

The Post said Gaden has a normal IQ and the required test scores but also has a decoding disability, which makes it difficult to translate letters or series of letters into spoken words.

The association allows high-school athletes and colleges to make early, binding agreements before Nov. 15 for admission and scholarships to begin the following year.

This is time-sensitive because the scholarships for which Gaden might be eligible could be awarded to others over the next few

► 9 CATS MAKE COACHES ALL BIG-8 TEAMS

The Coaches All-Big 8 football team was announced yesterday, and four Wildcats made the first team.

Junior wide receiver Kevin Lockett was the only member of the offense to make the first team, while senior defensive tackle Tim Colston, senior safety Chuck Marlowe and sophomore cornerback Chris Canty all made the defensive first-team for the Cats.

Offensive second-team selections were senior wide receiver Mitch Running and senior offensive tackle Chris Oltmanns.

Senior defensive end Dirk Ochs, senior linebacker Percell Gaskins and junior cornerback Joe Gordon made second-team defense.

Earlier Lockett, Colston, Canty, Gordon and Gaskins were named to the AP All-Big 8 first teams.

On Monday, Lockett and Ochs were also named to the GTE Academic All-District VII football team.

Canty is also a finalist for the 1995 College Football Defensive Player of the Year award by the Football Writers Association of America.

He is also a finalist for the Jim Thorpe Award, given to the nation's top defensive back.

► PARKS AND RECREATION

Residents seek land for Northview park

Robert Patnode
staff reporter

Northview-area residents said they want an adequate amount of land to be purchased for a community park that would meet the needs of their growing community.

Residents and Manhattan Parks and Recreation Board members were at a standstill for a proposal for a park in the northeast part of Manhattan Tuesday evening.

No action was taken on the park proposal at the meeting.

A majority of Northview residents present disapproved of the board's park proposal.

Ed Klimek, board member, created a seven-point plan for a community park.

The first step would be to expand the Northview public swimming pool.

The second step is to install practice fields. Klimek said the idea would be to purchase Gorman Field from Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, strip off existing soil, replace it with suitable soil and develop two baseball and softball fields and one soccer field.

The third step would be to create a lighted walking trail. It would link the practice fields to the swimming pool.

The fourth point would be to finish Linear Park and link it with the Casement Road trail entrance.

The fifth point would be to develop two tennis courts. In a joint effort with USD 383, the tennis courts would be built on the future grounds of Eisenhower Middle School.

The sixth step would be to link Northview Park and Eisenhower Middle School with a lighted sidewalk.

The seventh step would be to purchase adequate amount of land to facilitate the growing community and its need for a park.

Residents said they did not like the proposal. They said their main concern was getting the Manhattan City Commission to allow the board to purchase a sufficient amount of land to develop the park.

Mike Penrod, Northview resident, said community members want the park board to do two things.

The residents want the commission to purchase at least 50 acres of undeveloped land in the Northview area for the park and begin immediate park development.

Penrod said the infrastructure was not adequate. The area has grown, which has reduced the available park and recreational space.

He said Northview Elementary School has grown, which was taking away space for a potential community park.

Northview residents who were present said the city first needs to get the land.

"I think the thing the board should get onto is the purchase of a big chunk of land," Herman Howard, Northview resident, said.

Klimek agreed with the concerns of the residents.

"We can get the park purchased," Klimek said. "That's where we're at now. We need to purchase land. Once we get that done, we can move."

Some of the residents also disapproved of Klimek's seven-point plan for the park.

Northview resident Vincent Tracey, who wrote a memorandum to the board, said community members had different ideas of what should be included in the park.

They wanted adequate parking facilities with sufficient lighting to allow the Riley County Police Department to patrol and prevent criminal activity.

They also wanted nature, hiking and jogging trails.

Covered, accessible picnic and barbecue facilities and playground equipment are also needed, the residents said.

The residents also wanted to develop softball fields and a combination of

MEETING

► There will be a meeting at 4:30 p.m. Dec. 4 to further discuss a recommendation to the commission for a northeast park proposal.

football and soccer fields.

Water areas could be developed for fishing and wildlife observation and for possible swimming use, the residents said.

The residents' last request was for a trail for bicycles and dirtbikes.

Tracey said if the community is going to spend money for a park, it wants to make the most of it.

"We don't need to duplicate the things the other parks have because that's expensive and a waste of tax money we're all paying," Tracey said.

Penrod said public involvement surrounding the community park proposal had increased.

The proposal was first developed in 1992. Since then, nine meetings and three surveys have been associated with the proposal.

More than 1,100 Manhattan residents have responded to the surveys. Based on the results of the surveys, the most popular activities were concerts and entertainment, picnics, area walking, trail walking and wildlife observation.

► CITY COMMISSION

Commission reviews agency contracts

Jamie Willey
staff reporter

The Manhattan City Commission reviewed several contracts for 1996 that will be voted on during the city commission meeting next Tuesday.

The commissioners and Mayor Edith Stunkel listened to representatives from the Chamber of Commerce, Arts Council, Civic Theatre and the Historical Society.

The representatives presented what their agencies plan to do with the money that will be given to them if their contracts are signed.

John Pence, chairman of Conventions and Visitors Bureau steering committee for the Chamber of Commerce, said the highest priority for the visitors' bureau was to build a visitors' center near Interstate 70.

"Our primary role is to market this community," Pence said.

The visitor's center would entice people to get off of Interstate 70 and stop in Manhattan, Pence said.

If people stop off in Manhattan, businesses might be attracted to the city, he said.

If the contract is signed, $347,105 is budgeted for the visitor's bureau. The funds will be generated by the transient guest tax, which is charged to people who stay in hotels while in Manhattan.

The three other commissioners present — including Justin Kastner, Steve Hall and Bruce Snead along with Stunkel — all agreed the visitor's bureau contract will be voted on during the next commission meeting.

Randy Martin, president of the Chamber of Commerce, spoke for the industrial promotions contract and said many of the less-important activities the Chamber of Commerce has been put off for too long.

Martin said additional money is needed for the Chamber of Commerce so new employees can be hired, because there has been increased demand for services provided by the Chamber of Commerce.

"We just don't have enough manpower. We always feel like we're a week behind," Martin said.

The contract for industrial promotions has a $45,000 increase in funds provided by the city.

Hall said he had not felt comfortable about increasing the contract by $45,000, because he felt the extra money is not needed by the Chamber of Commerce.

A lot of money was already being spent on a good infrastructure that brings businesses to town, he said.

Stunkel, Kastner and Snead all agreed they were comfortable with giving the extra money to the Chamber of Commerce.

Kastner said Manhattan's infrastructure had been improved by taxes raised from new businesses that were brought in by the Chamber of Commerce.

Stunkel said the scope of services in the new contract allows the commission to know where the money will be spent. She said in the past, the Chamber of Commerce was given money to spend at its own discretion.

In the past, the Arts Council, Civic Theater and the Historical Society had not had formal contracts, Stunkel said. The agencies were given grants by the city to perform their functions, she said.

By signing contracts with the three agencies that formerly had no contracts, the agencies will be made more public, Stunkel said.

"This is an opportunity for the public to give us input on how these various organizations are benefiting the community with public money," Stunkel said.

The Arts Council, Civic Theater and Historical Society are all receiving the same amount of money from the city for 1996 as previous years: $24,000 for the Arts Council, $6,000 for the Civic Theater and $5,000 for the Historical Society.

All five of the contracts discussed at the city commission work session will be voted on in a city commission meeting next Tuesday.

Mother appears in court for arson, murder of her children

Associated Press

OLATHE, Kan. — Attorneys for a doctor whose two children died in an arson fire last month released a statement on his behalf the same day as his wife made her first court appearance on charges related to their deaths.

Attorneys for Dr. Michael Farrar asked the press on Monday to respect his privacy while Farrar, his surviving daughter, Kate, and his family are trying to cope with an unbelievable and impossibly difficult situation.

"Dr. Farrar is devastated by the deaths of two of his children and by the criminal charges brought against their mother," according to the statement signed by attorney Norman Beal.

Farrar filed for divorce from Dr. Debora Green on Oct. 25, one day after a fire in the couple's Prairie Village home killed Tim Farrar, 13, and Kelly Farrar, 6. Green is charged with aggravated arson and first-degree murder in the deaths of the two children.

Green, 44, is also charged with two counts of attempted first-degree murder — one for Kate, 10, who escaped the blaze, and the second for the alleged attempted poisoning of her estranged husband.

Two hearing dates were scheduled for Green in Johnson County District Court Monday after some squabbling between attorneys.

Green was granted a Dec. 7 hearing on a motion to modify her $3 million bond and was scheduled for a preliminary hearing during the week of Jan. 29.

The defense had requested that the preliminary hearing — which is to determine whether there is enough evidence to hold a defendant for trial — be on Jan. 15.

"Two weeks to anybody is a long time if you've never been in jail before. ... Our position is that if they were not ready to prosecute this case in a speedy manner, they should not have gone forward with charges," said Dennis Moore, a former district attorney and Green's lead attorney.

Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison said he has a busy caseload that week and that the Green case is complex. Johnson County District Judge Peter Ruddick agreed with Morrison and scheduled the hearing for Jan. 29.

► FULBRIGHT SCHOLAR

Visiting scholar will teach, research

Camille Wood
staff reporter

Students attending K-State's spring semester will have a chance to meet Fulbright Scholar Wu Chunqu.

Wu, an internationally renowned military history scholar, will be at K-State from December to September 1996.

Don Mrozek, professor of history, said that as part of Fulbright policies, Wu would be performing several tasks while in Kansas.

"They want us to share his talents with other departments, various community organizations and other universities," Mrozek said.

Wu will work on military history research projects, guest lecture for political science and anthropology classes, and teach a graduate seminar for the history department and Modern Chinese History.

Marsha Frey, professor of history, said K-State was chosen to host Wu on a Fulbright scholarship through a proposal submitted to the Council for International Exchange of Scholars.

"The Fulbright scholarship is an extremely prestigious grant for a university to get," Frey said.

Wu taught military history at K-State in 1987 and 1989. Frey said Wu's teaching broadened students' knowledge of world history.

"Professor Wu did an outstanding job for us on his prior visit," Frey said. "He gave both our undergraduate and graduate students a new perspective on military history, such as that of the Korean War."

Wu is an expert on the Korean War, and his term at K-State will benefit students by exposing them to non-American culture for a long period of time, Frey said.

"He will be teaching classes on campus, so students will have a longer exposure," Frey said.

Wu's interpretation of Chinese history will add another dimension to what students learn in American history, Mrozek said.

"Our department has a strong emphasis in military history, but we don't know that much about the Chinese part in war," Mrozek said.

That is because most Chinese history sources can only be interpreted by Chinese-literate people, who are not easily accessible because of government intervention, Mrozek said.

As a result, Wu will be working on a research project called Decisive Wars of China from Ancient Times to the Present, Mrozek said.

K-State's international ties with the Beijing University and the Academy of Military Science have already proven beneficial.

Wu has helped several faculty members develop projects with history counterparts in China, Mrozek said.

It is K-State's hope to better expand international relations through student and faculty exchanges to foreign lands in the name of education, Mrozek said.

Baby Calvin rejects heart, dies 9 years after transplant

Associated Press

GLENDAL, Ky. — Robbie Dean Cardin did his homework, had supper and went to bed. He woke up sick during the night, and early Tuesday the 9 1/2-year-old boy died.

The transplanted heart he had received when he was just 27 days old, after a national debate on organ distribution, had failed.

"It's been 9 1/2 years. I thought it was clear sailing," his mother, Trish, said Tuesday.

She pointed to a stack of school work sitting on a living room table.

"That's his homework," she said, her eyes filling with tears. "Even last night he was working for today. And today he's dead."

Robbie had been feeling ill, but Mrs. Cardin and her husband, Wendell, just thought he had the flu that had been going around.

Late Monday, they rushed him to Kosair Children's Hospital in Louisville from their farm in southern Hardin County.

There, doctors determined Robbie was rejecting the transplanted heart, which stopped at 4:45 a.m.

"It was unexpected," said Dr. Erle Austin, a pediatric heart surgeon at Kosair. "He was doing very well. The last time he was seen everything was normal."

"But we all have to recognize that anybody who has a transplanted organ, there is always the potential for rejection."

Robbie underwent a heart transplant at Kosair on June 13, 1986, only the sixth successful infant heart transplant in this country.

Robbie was born with hypoplastic left heart syndrome, in which the left side of the heart is too small and weak to pump blood to the body. He could have died by the age of two months.

But since the transplant, he had been playing Little League baseball and was described by his parents as a normal boy. He would have been 10 next May.

His fourth-grade teacher at Sonora Elementary, Becky Dennis, said Robbie's classmates voted to keep his desk in its place and handmade cards were piled on top of it Tuesday.

Dennis said Robbie told her

Monday he was feeling blah.

At the time of his transplant, Dr. Constantine Mavroudis referred to Robbie as Baby Calvin in an effort to protect the family's privacy.

However, the Cardins became involved in the debate over organ procurement when Robbie, although he was at the top of a nationwide donor list, lost a chance for a heart a week before his eventual transplant.

The parents of the first donor infant bypassed the normal donor network and decided their baby's organ should go to Baby Jesse, a California child whose teen-age parents had gone on national talk shows to plead for a heart.

The resulting debate led to a law requiring donor organs to be distributed through a national network.

Baby Jesse died several years ago.

SOFTWARE REVIEW

Golf game tees off with superb sound, video commentary

Eric Westphal
contributing writer

It might be time to clean your clubs and put them away for winter, but thanks to Electronic Arts, you can continue playing fun, challenging golf right at home.

With PGA Tour '96, the folks at EA Sports have continued their tradition of high-quality sports games. Packed with features and amazing realism, PGA Tour is the top PC golf game on the market.

Given the choice of five game modes, including stroke-play, tournament-play, skins and shoot-out, you can play as yourself or as one of 14 PGA professionals.

The professionals have been digitized to give you their personal swing as well as their response to both good and bad putts. PGA Tour '96 also includes commentary, statistics and actual video highlights for each professional.

With all these extras, you might be concerned that the game itself is not "up to par," but that is definitely not the case.

PGA Tour '96 is equipped with superb graphics and sound effects that give you the feel of real golf. You have your choice playing the championship course at TPC at Avenel, or at Spyglass Hill.

Each course also has video footage and commentary, as well as fly-bys for each hole. The player controls for PGA Tour '96 are the best this reviewer has seen in a computer golf game.

Each shot's distance and straightness variables are controlled with an arc that represents the golfer's actual swing, rather than the small circle used in other games.

You are also given a "Target Arc," which is used to see the path of the ball before you even swing. It even changes colors if your shot path involves trees.

If you like to get fancy, PGA Tour '96 even lets you put spin on the ball. As the spin is increased or decreased, your "Target Arc" is automatically adjusted. There is also a "Waggle" feature that simulates how your club face actually strikes the ball.

One of the nicest features of PGA Tour '96 is the multiple views that are given. For each shot, you are given the golfer's view, the hole's overhead view and the view of your lie.

Once your swing is made, you are instantly given a view of the area your ball will land, as well as view of the actual path of the ball, provided by the "Ball Cam."

The one aspect of PGA Tour '96 users might find disappointing is that it is not optimized for Windows 95. If you are running Windows 95, you must shut down to the MS-DOS mode before playing the game.

Fortunately, PGA Tour '96 will add an icon to your desktop that will automatically perform the shutdown process and return to Windows 95 upon exiting.

Because of its extensive features, PGA Tour '96 requires a fairly well-equipped computer. A 486 DX 50 MHz with 8 MB RAM, 256 Color SVGA, 2x CD-ROM, soundcard and 13 MB of available hard drive spaces are needed.

Overall, PGA Tour '96 is extremely impressive. It's as close to real golf as you can come, and you don't even have to worry about losing your ball.

► JUVENILE COURT

Boys sentenced in murder of 5-year-old

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Two young boys who dropped a 5-year-old to his death from a 14th-floor apartment will be confined to a youth home for no more than 10 years, a judge ruled Tuesday.

They dropped the boy because he wouldn't steal candy for them.

The boys, now 11 and 12, were convicted of the juvenile equivalent of first-degree murder. They could be kept in custody until they are 21 years old but could be released earlier if a court determines they have made enough progress.

Juvenile Court Judge Carol Kelly said she wanted the state to locate a center that could offer hope of returning the boys to society.

Kelly set Dec. 19 for a hearing on a defense motion for a new trial and to find out whether the state has found a facility that will accept the boys.

The neatly dressed boys stood impassively before the judge, surrounded by parents, lawyers and parole officers, during a brief hearing that made no mention of the horrifying details of the death of 5-year-old Eric Morse.

He was killed Oct. 13, 1994, when he was dangled, then dropped from a 14th-floor window at the Chicago Housing Authority's Ida B. Wells apartment building.

Eric had accompanied the boys to a vacant 14th-floor apartment in the building. His 9-year-old brother, Derrick, testified that the older boys lured the brothers there by asking if they wanted to see a clubhouse.

Prosecutors said the suspects were angry because Eric had gotten them in trouble with their mothers and wouldn't steal candy for them.

The older boy grabbed Eric and hung him out the window, Derrick testified.

"I pulled him back in," Derrick said. But the boys grabbed Eric and hung him out the window again. When Derrick grabbed his brother's arm, one of the boys bit his hand to make him let go.

Derrick said he ran down the staircase, hoping to catch his younger brother before he crashed to the ground.

BROWNFIELD, Texas — Is it a lighthearted hobby or a ruthless business move for Mary Gunnels to make silk chrysanthemums at home for the high-school homecoming game?

Gunnels is headed for a second trial about the issue after jurors deadlocked the first time she was charged with knowingly and intentionally operating a flower shop in a residential area.

"What am I, the killer mum-maker?" she said. "Yeah, watch out. I'm going to get you with my glue gun."

City officials told her in September she couldn't sell the elaborate homecoming mums — complete with ribbon streamers and trinkets attached — out of her home because it wasn't in a commercial zone.

She countered that because she only sells about 30 mums every fall for $23 each, she couldn't possibly be considered a florist.

They took her to court.

Not only was Gunnels running a business, she was drawing traffic into a residential neighborhood, argued Bill McGowan, city attorney in Brownfield, a town of about 10,000 residents 40 miles southwest of Lubbock.

Gunnels' attorney argued it was legal to sell crafts from a home.

The jury deadlocked Nov. 14, and she faces trial again early next year. She faces a $500 fine if convicted.

But the flower fracas has already taken its toll on Gunnels, who said she sold only about 10 mums this year.

"What I would like to know is how much money the city has spent on this case," Gunnels said.

"The job market in education in Kansas is very saturated, but there are other states that are just begging for teachers," he said.

Both Esfeld and Schuley recommend students register with Career and Employment Services as part of their job search. The center also has listings for part-time and co-op jobs.

anybody," Ngalamulume said. "Mobutu held a meeting in Zaire in April of 1990 to talk about democracy. He let the people believe their pain and suffering would go away."

Emizet said that in a fair and free election, Mobutu would never win, and he knows it. That is why he tries to buy government opposition. Zaire needs a process of democratization that includes the sincerity of those in power, and free and fair elections, he said.

"The army and the police and all

"The only fee is a $7 registration fee, which gets you on a computer disk, which can take you from your freshman year to three months after graduation," Schuley said.

This allows students to put their résumés on a computer disk that can be viewed by employers.

Esfeld said companies called every day asking for searches of job candidates.

"There are students that are getting hired simply because they registered," he said.

The people who want a job will have to put in a lot of work to be successful, he said.

"I tell students that looking for a job is a full-time job," he said.

Career and Employment Services can be reached at 532-6506. Career and Employment Services also has a page on the World Wide Web, which lists companies that are coming to campus and has links to other Internet job sites. The page is located at (<http://www.ksu.edu/ces/ces.html>).

security services serve Mobutu," Ngalamulume said. "Zaire is a national community. We are not certain Mobutu will surrender after the elections."

There is no hope for Zaire if Mobutu manages to win in a fair and free election. President Mobutu and his entourage are incapable of change, Emizet said.

Stephan Tubene, president of the Zairian Students of America, said Zairians hoped the United States would help secure their democracy.

"We need U.S. support to establish democracy in Zaire," Tubene said.

Emizet said international cooperation was needed to make free elections possible. "The United Nations may restore hope in Zaire. If Mobutu persists, there is no hope for the future," Emizet said.

Mobutu has been the only candidate in every election since the 1970s. He has increased his power through oppression. Democracy should start with the grassroots level and move up, Emizet said.

"Dr. Emizet always has right and real predictions. The speech was very informative," Beth Wilkey, a junior in political science, said.

The speech was organized by the International Coalition Center and Zairian Students of America.

sions would also be convenient for students who live off campus.

"We think the second six-week session will be popular because students who choose to have an apartment will have already started their August lease," Unger said. "We're trying to accommodate students and make things available for them."

The University will offer residence hall space for on-campus students.

"We're prepared to provide residence hall space for the new 6-8-6 plus sessions," Bosco said. "I'm sure there'll be some fraternities and sororities evaluating whether they'll keep houses open. This could be a very worthwhile trend for our students."

K-State will offer classes in high demand, such as classes in personal computing, English, math and the natural sciences, during the three sessions, Bosco said.

"We've recommended that the summer school staff offer courses that have a high demand that cross over several degree requirements," Bosco said. "Our faculty have been extremely responsive and are very interested in teaching these 6-8-6 programs."

"We hope this will allow us to offer more seats or sections as this will keep our class sizes reasonable throughout the fall and spring terms."

Bosco said students would be able to pre-enroll in any of these options during their regular spring pre-enrollment session.

SWARTZ

Swartz said Belarus was highly conservative and communism is deep-rooted. It is also advanced in agriculture and in education.

"The U.S. has sent about $184.5 million in agriculture assistance," Swartz said. "The process of reform stopped dead in its tracks because there was no need to reform with the products that we sent. Why that is, I don't know."

Swartz also said Belarus education was an establishment of independence in 1992. At that time, the first privately run educational institution was established in Russia. Although there is constant threat of bankruptcy, the institution is still standing firm.

"To bring one student from Belarus to the United States to study, it would cost about $20,000," Swartz said. "At that cost, 40 students could study at the new university and get the same quality education."

Swartz said when people are influenced by outside cultures, a "McDonaldization factor" occurs.

"Those people come here and see McDonald's and such, and then they want to stay here," Swartz said. "This becomes a problem because those people should want to live there, prosper there and try to make an influence on their country."

Jason Walle, junior in mass communications, said it was amazing how much people in the United States could take for granted.

"So many people think that they have it so bad," Walle said. "Then you hear things like this about other countries and realize that we're doing all right."

Jennifer Arnett, senior in political science, said Swartz was interesting. It was good to hear that people can make a difference, she said.

"That's a real breath of fresh air," Arnett said.

year, but would wait until the close of filing in June.

She told supporters and reporters packed into a conference room at a hotel that her decision to leave the House after six terms was mostly personal, and she wants to spend time with her family and do some traveling and writing. She received a standing ovation at the conclusion of her announcement.

Meyers smiled broadly throughout her prepared announcement, but her voice caught when she thanked her longtime staff members.

The moderate Republican favors term limits, supports abortion rights and favors the death penalty. She is the fifth Republican House member to announce a decision against seeking re-election next year.

Meyers started her political career in 1967 with a five-year stint on the Overland Park City Council. She served in the Kansas Senate from 1972 to 1984, when she was elected to the U.S. House. She succeeded retiring Republican Rep. Larry Winn Jr., campaigning on fiscal issues and saying she supported a balanced budget, a budget freeze and a bill giving the president power of line-item veto.

Following the Republican takeover of Congress in 1994, Meyers became the only woman to chair a full House committee. She has used her new clout to focus attention on the governmental regulation and tax burdens faced by businesses and family farms.

Democrats have put the Kansas 3rd District on their list of about 40 Republican seats they believe they have a good chance of winning. The party will funnel more money to the Democratic candidate.

"That district could be won by a good mainstream Democrat," said Howard Bauleke, a Kansan who works for House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt. "You've got a lot of voters there who are not native Kansans. It's very mobile."

Vince Snowbarger, the Kansas House majority leader, announced earlier he would seek the Republican nomination for Meyers' seat.

Ballet teacher

■ Japanese-born ballerina says she always knew she wanted to be a dancer

Claudette Riley
staff writer

A new K-State dance instructor chose to live her dream and still managed to make her mother happy.

"I love to move and dance," Joyce Yagerline, assistant professor of speech, said. "Mom always wanted me to be a schoolteacher, and look, now I am. She's proud of me."

Yagerline, a professional ballerina for 13 years with Dayton Ballet, Tulsa Ballet Theatre and San Antonio Ballet, retired from in 1992.

"I always knew that I wanted to be a dancer. It's unexplainable. I love to dance. It is something I have to do," Yagerline said.

Born in Nagoya to a Japanese mother and an American serviceman whom her mother married after the war, Yagerline took a dance movement class at age 5. By age 10, she had begun learning ballet.

Her first professional job was with the Cincinnati Lyric Opera while completing a bachelor of arts in dance at Butler University in Indianapolis.

After retirement, Yagerline worked as a graduate teaching assistant while earning a masters of fine arts degree from Texas Woman's University in Denton, Texas.

"While at TWU, I became familiar with the liberal arts-based curriculums," Yagerline said. "That's what attracted me to K-State. I like it because it offers a broader-based curriculum for dance majors."

At K-State, Yagerline teaches Ballet I, II, III, a dance appreciation lecture course and a dance theater lab.

"I teach exercises and body conditioning, which incorporates exercises which have evolved from the concepts of Joseph Pilates," Yagerline said. "I look for students who are hard-working, committed, not afraid to learn new things and who are open-minded. They have to have that desire to want to dance inside them because you can't teach someone who doesn't want to learn."

Yagerline, who choreographed a piece for Winterdance '95, will also perform restaged pieces by Patricia Adams, guest artist in residence.

Ballet is a classic art form and has a tradition we need to uphold, Yagerline said.

Students are expected to keep hair up and continue the tradition with appropriate form-fitting attire.

"Students should not look disheveled or sloppy," Yagerline said. "It's also about the aesthetic elements of being a dancer."

Jennifer Chance, junior in architectural engineering, said she liked Yagerline's traditional approach.

"In class, she really expects us to hold our positions by the book," Chance said. "She has good analogies, and it connects an image for us, which makes it easier for us to see what we need to be doing."

Chance, a student of ballet for 10 years, said Yagerline was a teacher and a friend.

"If you have a problem, she is really good about working with you one on one after class," she said.

Melanie Furjanic, freshman in dance, will perform the only ballet piece in Winterdance '95.

"She has certain tidbits she shares about how I

WinterDance to offer musical variety

Portia Slisco
staff writer

From bare feet to point shoes, WinterDance '95 will highlight several unique dance styles.

Luke Kahlich, a member of the K-State dance faculty, said the dance styles would include everything from a contemporary folk dance titled "Among the People," to a classical pax de deux called "On a Star."

"Among the People" will feature three couples who will perform a folk dance to music from Romania, Kahlich said.

Several modern pieces were choreographed by Vera Orlock and Joyce Yagerline, both assistant professors in speech at K-

State and members of the dance faculty.

Guest artist Patricia Adams specializes in Isadora Duncan dance. Adams worked with 13 K-State dancers in a recreation of a Duncan dance called "Isadora Duncan Work," first choreographed in 1927.

"Isadora Duncan was the founder of modern dance," Kahlich said.

Other dances will include "Conversation," a jazz dance set to the music of the Manhattan Transfer, and three modern dances choreographed to the music of Paul Winters, Scarlatti, Handel and Brahms.

WinterDance '95 will be presented at Nichols Theatre because of its unique in-the-round stage.

Kahlich said this would give a new perspective to the audience and the dancers.

"It gives them a broader experience. The audience sees it from all sides," Kahlich said.

Students auditioned for WinterDance '95 the second week of classes.

They have been practicing since that time, Kahlich said.

WinterDance '95 will offer a variety of classical, contemporary and traditional music and dance performed by dance and non-dance majors at K-State.

WinterDance '95 will open at 8 tonight. Tickets are available at the McCain Auditorium box office.

► TRANSPORTATION

Increased speed limit debated

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Citing the likelihood of more deaths on highways, U.S. Transportation Secretary Federico Pena has urged Gov. Bill Graves to "consider carefully the safety implications of increasing speed limits in Kansas."

On Tuesday, President Clinton signed a bill that repeals federally imposed speed limits, allowing the states to set their own. On the same day, a committee of Kansas lawmakers recommended to the Legislature that the speed limit be 75 mph for four-lane highways and 65 for two-lane ones.

Under the law, Graves has 10 days to delay the repeal of the existing law, which spokesman Mike Matson said he intended to do.

That will give the Legislature 60 days after it convenes on Jan. 8 to set speed limits, or else the law reverts back to the pre-1974 limit, when Congress imposed a 55-mile limit.

Until then, the present speed limits will remain in effect.

"The setting of speed limits has a direct impact on public safety and the public purse," Pena told Graves in his letter. "Excessive speed is a factor in one-third of all fatal crashes. One thousand Americans are killed every month in speed-related crashes."

Matson said the governor believed the Legislature should consider safety when it takes up the issue.

► DIVISION OF BIOLOGY

Biology budget cuts mean no more frogs

Holly McConkey
staff reporter

Last spring, when K-State's Division of Biology stopped using frogs to observe muscular and nerve movements in the principles of biology course, rumors began to surface about people protesting the use of the frogs in the class.

"There was no activism or threats directed toward me or anyone else," said Diane Post, instructor and course coordinator for the Division of Biology. "We stopped using them because it was simply too expensive."

Although the frogs used in the course are common and easy to breed in the labs, it just became too expensive to have them in the department's budget, Post said.

"We've cut just about all we can cut, and I have no idea what will get cut after this," she said.

The 1995 fiscal-year budget for salaries and wages in the Division of Biology was $2,244,548, and operating costs were $100,993.

In 1996, the fiscal-year budget for salaries and wages was $2,202,956, and operating costs were $102,508.

"We have exactly the same costs, but things are just becoming more expensive," Brian Spooner, director of the Division of Biology, said.

Larry Williams, associate professor of biology, said the amount of money appropriated for teaching was fairly static right now, especially with the current trend of inflation, he said.

The static operating cost and salaries at K-State are an example of what is happening to universities across the country, Williams said.

"It isn't a matter of the administration trying to cut the money," he said. "If the legislature appropriates more, we will get more. If the legislature appropriates less, we will get less."

Now the only operating expenses the Division of Biology has for the principles of biology course includes the cost of fetal pigs and the replacement of permanent equipment.

There is also a relatively minor cost for replaceable items used in experiments, Post said.

Spooner said the principles of biology course is suffering from the effects of decay to the old equipment that can not be replaced.

"We have had to make choices. You have to make do one way or another," he said.

The tools the department is using to deliver the information are outdated. They are using tape decks instead of computers, he said.

"We are giving new information, but we are using old ways to deliver it. We are suffering from a decaying infrastructure that we are scrapping to keep working," Spooner said.

A new exercise was developed by the faculty to replace the frog exercise and is now being used in the course.

► BEER SALES

Union sells enough beer to cover initial investment

Dana Harding
staff reporter

Beer sales in the K-State Student Union are not making the Union rich.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said the initial investment of the recreation license has been recovered, but it has not been a tremendous money-maker. Through October, the total beer sales for Union Station and the recreation area were $5,300.

Connaughton said the initial investment was about $3,000, including the city license and audit fee, insurance and the coolers.

"I don't think we are going to get extremely rich off of beer sales, but it is a nice service for students," Connaughton said.

The majority of the beer consumers are league bowlers and students hanging out in the recreation area.

Beer is available to students of legal age until 9:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and until 9:30 or 10 p.m. Friday and Saturday except for Saturday mornings and during intramural events.

Terri Eddy, recreation manager, said she did not have an opinion on beer sales in the Union but was afraid serving beer would discourage faculty and student birthday parties on Saturday mornings in the recreation area.

"I wasn't for or against beer in the Union. I thought it would be more of a hassle than it has been," Eddy said.

PRESIDENT CLINTON BEGINS FIVE-DAY EUROPEAN PEACEKEEPING TRIP

LONDON (AP) — President Clinton arrived in London Wednesday at the start of a five-day European trip promoting a late-breaking agreement for Northern Ireland and a tenuous accord in Bosnia requiring U.S. and European troops.

In both instances, he asserted, "those who stand up for peace will have the United States standing with them."

Only hours before he began the first leg — to England, Ireland and Northern Ireland — an unexpected breakthrough was announced Tuesday in London. Britain and Ireland agreed to set aside their disagreement over disarming the IRA and set a date for negotiations intended to be joined by all parties in Northern Ireland.

The timing couldn't have been better and White House aides, despite being caught off guard, were jubilant.

IRS SEEKS NEW MONEY SOURCE

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Fresh misery, some predicted. An ill-considered reversal of efforts to simplify government, others suggested.

But most shrugged and assumed the taxman had figured a new way to say, "Gotcha!"

The source of irritation among business travelers at Pittsburgh International Airport was a memo revealed Tuesday that indicated the Internal Revenue Service was eyeing one of their most treasured perks: the frequent flier miles accumulated on brain-fuzzing business trips and applied to personal travel for pleasure.

Imagine the new revenue for the IRS.

Imagine, too, the irate business fliers, who would pay more taxes because work expenses may be deducted only to the extent they exceed 2 percent of adjusted gross income.

Imagine the paperwork, the cost of which seems sure to outrun any tax benefits for government coffers.

Later Tuesday, the tax agency indicated it might be rethinking its advice.

BUBBLE GUM PLANT RELOCATES

PHILADELPHIA — In 1928, a junior accountant at the Frank H. Fleer Co. developed the gooey pink substance that was to become the joy of school children and the bane of their teachers — bubble gum.

Sixty-seven years later, Fleer Corp. has closed the plant where Walter Diemer's creation — Dubble Bubble Gum — was first mass-produced and will instead focus on sports and collectible trading cards.

Fleer is the latest in a string of companies that have abandoned factories and towns they called home for decades and moved their production elsewhere.

Dubble Bubble and other candy will be made in an existing Fleer factory in Byhalia, Miss., company spokeswoman Sonia Moyer said.

PANEL LOOKS INTO DISARMING IRA

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Question: What's the difference between Anglo-Irish stalemate in September and half-baked breakthrough in November? Answer: President Clinton on your doorstep.

Under pressure to show progress before Clinton's arrival, Britain and Ireland agreed late Tuesday to set aside their differences on disarming the IRA. But they left the most difficult questions until long after he leaves.

They agreed to have a three-member body led by former Sen. George Mitchell look into how to disarm the Irish Republican Army and its pro-British Protestant enemies.

The IRA began a cease-fire in September 1994 and the "loyalist" Protestant gunmen stopped their attacks six weeks later.

While Mitchell's panel is at work, Ireland and Britain will pursue a second track, trying to hold talks with Northern Ireland parties to lay the groundwork for multiparty negotiations to begin in late February.

SOLDIERS PREPARE FOR BOSNIA

WASHINGTON — The 20,000 U.S. troops in Bosnia living in heated tents and portable barracks will represent the most visible part of a massive American effort involving forces afloat, aloft and in neighboring nations.

Pentagon officials said Tuesday that 17,000 U.S. forces would support the troops on the ground. They include fighter pilots patrolling the skies and providing air support for ground troops in trouble, sailors aboard aircraft carriers and patrol ships, Marines poised to conduct rescue missions and technicians, supply crews and communications specialists working in nearby countries.

With the deployment of the first 700 of those days away, new details are emerging about the mission — and the lifestyle these soldiers will lead.

► DRUG PREVENTION

Prevention is key to success of DARE■ Police officer teaches students to resist drugsCamille Wood
staff reporter

Officer Rick Dykstra is fighting crime with T-shirt, pencils and tether ball games.

Dykstra is a Drug Abuse Resistance Education officer for the Junction City Police Department. In October, he was awarded the Wheat State Crime Prevention award by the Kansas Attorney General.

Dykstra spends his days teaching first-, third- and fifth-grade students about resistance to drugs and violence in a manner appropriate for their ages.

"I don't just teach, I play. I've gotten really good at tether ball," Dykstra said.

The DARE program has changed in the last year, Dykstra said.

"It's more updated and current," Dykstra said, "and we're able to interact in a high-energy, positive way with children."

Dorothea McCowan, Milford Elementary student, said she loved having the DARE officer visit her school.

"We had a lot of fun," McCowan said. "He taught us how to say no to drugs and crime. Plus we got prizes and T-shirts and pencils."

Dykstra began his work in law enforcement in the prison system in 1985. He worked for the Department of Corrections in a variety of jobs but became frustrated with what he saw.

"I saw so many convicts in the prisons that it was ridiculous," Dykstra said. "We'd let one out the back, and two more would come in the front."

Something had to be done, he said. He said then was when he decided to become a police officer.

"I thought prevention had to be the key, not just intervention," he said.

Upon getting hired as a police officer, Dykstra was assigned to patrol. He also worked the Drug Task Force for a few months doing surveillance.

After being interviewed, selected and trained in 1994, Dykstra became a DARE officer.

Dykstra said three officers were assigned to the prevention section, and one more is to join the group in a

► FORENSICS

Speech team qualifies 5 students for nationals

Holly McCowen
staff reporter

Five K-State speech team students have already qualified for forensics nationals, and more are expected to follow, Craig Brown, speech coach, said.

"Six more Wildcats have two of the three needed legs to qualify for nationals in Florida this spring," he said. "Nearly everyone who has traveled has reached the finals for us at least once this fall. So life looks pretty good for the moment," Brown said.

The qualifying students attended two tournaments in Texas in early November, where they earned the right to participate in speech nationals at Florida this spring.

Janelle Moore, junior in microbiology, qualified for nationals in impromptu speaking.

Jennifer Pruitt, junior in journalism and mass communications, qualified in communication analysis and took second place overall in individual sweeps for the tournament with first place finishes in communication analysis and extemporaneous speaking.

Clayton Johnson, junior in secondary education; Becky Winter, junior in speech and journalism and mass communication; and Jared Adams, senior in speech, all qualified for nationals in persuasive speaking.

"I feel like I've reached the rewards for all of my hard work," Winter said.

Johnson said the key to success in forensics is a good coach and a lot of time and effort.

This is Johnson's first year trying college forensics.

Brown said the team is a little behind from where it has been in the past, but they are still well above average when compared to other universities.

"We're at the halfway mark," Brown said. "What happens in January and February is really important."

There is still time for some of the remaining team members to qualify for nationals.

Students have the possibility to qualify until March, Brown said.

K-State places 2 debate teams in national round-robin tournament

Gina Buster
staff reporter

Two K-State debate teams recently qualified for the Jesuit Round Robin Debate tournament in Illinois in January.

Chip Albright, sophomore in speech, and Kelly Ross, junior in political science, qualified for the tournament. Brent Siemers, junior in economics, and Sarah Glaser, freshman in chemical engineering, also qualified.

The teams are among only seven other teams in the nation to qualify for the tournament.

"It is a big honor to have two teams qualify for the tournament," Susan Stanfield, debate coach, said.

"This is a good indicator of the top teams in the country, and to have two teams place is a big deal," she said.

The top two scores from four of the most difficult fall tournaments were compiled, and those nine teams with the best scores were invited to the Jesuit tournament.

"It was Chip and I's goal to make it to this tournament. That's what we've been shooting for all semester," Ross said.

He also said he is pleased with how the team as a whole has progressed this season.

"We've all developed and are working together well as a team," Ross said.

It was the squad effort that helped the two teams to qualify, Stanfield said.

"Everyone shares their research, and the teams are debating with everyone's work," she said.

Albright said it was important that they ended the season on such a high note.

"We're looking forward to the chance to debate with a whole bunch of really good teams," he said. "It will help to improve us."

K-State burns dangerous campus pyromaniacs

It's long past time people understood they won't get their wrists slapped by their residence hall assistant for committing life-threatening crimes.

Pyros, take notice.

The K-State police has made its stance clear on how to deal with the residence-hall firebugs who have been plaguing the campus since the semester began.

Two K-State students were arrested and charged with aggravated arson Tuesday after allegedly setting fires in Marlatt Hall's sixth-floor hallway, the south stairwell and bathroom of the B-Wing, and the basement.

The residence hall basement received damage from the automatic sprinkler system.

Although K-State authorities are still investigating the incident and compiling evidence, they hope to have the case before the county attorney by Thursday.

Aggravated arson is a felony, and those found guilty of it could receive a jail sentence or a fine.

Good for them.

It's long past time the delinquents who have been wasting University money and putting other residents in danger face the full penalty of the law.

It's long past time people understood they won't get their wrists slapped by their residence hall assistant for committing life-threatening crimes.

It's not a joke, and it shouldn't be treated as such.

"Harmless pranks" do not endanger lives and cause property damage.

Hopefully, other pyromaniacs will take notice that they will get caught, that students on their floor will turn them in, and that they will face stiff penalties for their stupidity.

Take a hint, will you? Get lost.

Clinton flounders on Bosnia policy

Last Monday, the president of the United States appeared on national television to deliver a prime-time speech.

The purpose of this speech was to give him an opportunity to explain his decision to send troops to Bosnia in light of the fact that a peace agreement had been signed in Dayton, Ohio.

Before I begin, let me say I have the utmost respect for those troops that will be in Bosnia and all other personnel on duty throughout the world.

This debate centers around decisions to use the military made by civilian leaders.

In his speech, President Clinton maintained that our involvement would be limited, there was a national interest at stake, and our troops would be given use of all force needed to repel any attack.

Mr. President, let's get real. Despite the fact that you have good intentions and believe using the military as a police force will be effective, will you be the one to tell a mother her child was lost in a fight for good intentions?

Mr. President, no matter how many times you or your subordinates say our involvement will be limited in scope, this does not prevent certain Bosnians, Croats, or Serbs who don't have the luxury of CNN to see you say these nice things from entering a fire-fight with our troops.

Your record for limited conflict and maintaining American military integrity is not exactly glistening.

The American military is not an international pizza-delivery service. It is an organization whose sole purpose is to wreck havoc and destruction.

JEREMY STEPHENS

Secondly, you maintain that there is a compelling national-security interest for sending a presence to Bosnia on the basis it will maintain European stability.

The current war has been fought for almost the last four years, and it has yet to spread to other areas. The warring factions in the conflict have been at each other's throats longer than America has been in existence.

Simply sending troops to the region to keep the peace will not ease the hostility that one side has felt toward the other for the last several centuries.

Finally, you have not demonstrated that you are willing to give our troops the utmost protection they can have.

Let's not forget that you lost 18 men in Somalia because you did not want to appear too "warlike" and did not send the proper equipment or firepower to Mogadishu.

Let's not forget that, because of your urging to shrink the military budget, some troops went ashore in Haiti without even a full ration of bullets.

During your speech, you said we were not a police force and we couldn't stop all wars, but we should stop some wars.

What criteria do you use to determine which wars we should stop? Because millions of people die every day on this planet, where do you propose we go next to stop the suffering?

In addition, how can we be certain that this won't flare up again? There must be some doubt, for although there are peace agreements signed, we still have to enforce peace. We are not going to fight a war — we are going to enforce a peace.

The military exists to identify the bad guys and force them into submission, not prevent other guys from shooting at each other.

Finally, in your speech, you said the Pope told you to make sure the century doesn't end with a war in Sarajevo. Why do you selectively act on what the Pope recommends you to?

As I recall, the Pope has also urged you to stop abortion in this country, and he still remains firmly opposed to adultery.

NEWSPRINT COST CRUNCH

Editor,

Over the last few months, there has been a great deal of concern about the decreasing availability of the Collegian on campus.

The Board of Student Publications would like to address these valid concerns with the reasons why this difficult choice was made.

During the last year, Student Publications has been hit hard with the dramatic increase in the cost of newsprint.

This newsprint is the paper on which the Collegian is printed. Because of this near-doubling in the price of newsprint from $440 per ton to $820 per ton, the Board of Student Publications was left to make cuts in the budget in order to remain fiscally solvent.

The budget had already been decreased in several areas during April and May, when the original budget was considered to try to cope with the increases in newsprint.

This second round of cuts on Oct. 9, 1995, was necessary because the cost of newsprint continued to rise, skyrocketing beyond our highest expectations.

During the first few months of this school year, the board again struggled to find a way to make the budget balance.

This entire situation was made more difficult because there were already large cuts across the board in other operating expenses in place for this year.

These reductions were in copies, travel, marketing and staff development, volume credit, phones, postage and employee benefits. Because these areas had already been hard-hit, the Board was left with only two other places to cut enough money to balance the budget. They were salaries and printing expense (press run).

Due to the fact these decisions had to be made during a fiscal year, the board's hands were tied on what changes it could make with regards to salaries. This left the Board with only one option — to cut the press run.

To balance expenses and income, it was necessary to reduce the press run from 12,500 to 11,500. If the cuts in other operating expenses had not been made last year, a 30-percent reduction in the press run would have been necessary.

The board regrets as much as anyone the fact students are having a hard time finding a newspaper.

Please be assured that when the price of newsprint goes down, the board will consider increasing the press run.

Unfortunately, the outlook is not very good.

According to several articles and trade magazines, the cost is expected to increase or stay at its high level for at least a couple of years.

We appreciate your understanding during these hard times. We also would encourage students to read the E-Collegian, which is on the World Wide Web at (<http://www.spub.ksu.edu/>), and we hope that students will be willing to share their printed newspapers.

If anyone has any questions about the Student Publications budget or the corporation in general, please feel free to contact any of the following board members: Ben Clouse, chairman of the finance committee, 537-7743; Trent LeDoux, board member, 539-2365; Lin Bliss, chairman of the personnel committee, 395-2088; Jake Arnett, board member, 537-4012; Carol Oukrop, board member, 532-6890; Barry Flinchbaugh, board member, 532-1505; Bill Feyerharm, board member, 532-6900.

Communication saves shaky
Roommate relations

As you face the challenges of completing fall term, you might be saying to yourself, "I can't take it anymore! I've got to get rid of my roommate!"

Whether it is the Chatty Cathy roommate who spends endless hours telling the tale of her high-school Young Miss Pageant or the Jack Gotcha roommate who wants to relive, for the thousandth time, his glory days as a jock, "before the ankle injury"; whether it is the overzealous pursuit of cleanliness worthy of an operating room, the absolute lack of personal hygiene or the appreciation of music amplified to concert-hall levels — you get the idea.

Roommates come in all extremes. So what can you do if you find yourself dreading those hours at home, wishing you could escape when you are there, hating the roommate and feeling resentful, desperate and miserable about the whole situation?

You've already considered throwing him/her out, and you've considered packing up and moving yourself. The financial crunch of either choice is what has kept you there so far, and let's face it — you feel stuck.

Thankfully, there are some good ways to approach a roommate on issues that are driving you crazy. The rules for engagement can be summed up with four T's — Timing, Tact, Trading and Talking.

■ Timing — Don't approach your roommate during a rushed time, during "Seinfeld" or, God forbid, when Allison and Billy are fighting. Pick a time when neither of you is hurried or too stressed.

It doesn't hurt to set it up, "Hey, do you have time to go get a burger with me later this evening? I have something I'd like to talk over." Setting a time for discussion helps put other things on the back burner for that period of time.

■ Tact — Start by recognizing and maybe even mentioning a habit of your own that might be irritating your roommate.

For example, remember what your little brother had to say about your snoring or what your last roommate had to say about your housekeeping skills? Beginning with, "My last roommate always said I played my stereo too loudly late at night. I want to tell you about something you do that bugs me. I also want to know if I'm bugging you with something I do."

This keeps it from feeling like an attack and will help draw your roommate into the conversation without setting yourself up as Bad Lecturer of the Week.

■ Trading — You've already let it be known that you are aware you could (theoretically, and certainly not in practice) be annoying (once a year, or less) and you've invited your roommate to speak with you in an adult way that supports his or her right to be treated with respect.

By inviting comments on your own behavior, you take the risk that your roommate might unload his or her frustration on you.

That could happen. On the other hand, when your roommate offers a behavior YOU might change, you have a ready-made Trading Opportunity. "OK, my stereo IS too loud late at night! Well, I'm glad that you're telling me, because it didn't seem that loud to me. I'm going to watch it from now on."

GUEST COLUMN

MARK HURST

"But I'll tell you, I need some consideration from you on the dirty dishes (or paying the phone bill, or having spontaneous parties midweek when you have a test the next day, or whatever it is that's driving you nuts)."

At this point in the conversation, be prepared to state specifically what you want from your roommate — "I want you to wash the dishes you use and put them away before you leave the kitchen." You don't have to say it 10 times or shake your finger in their face (that doesn't sit well with anyone); just state it simply and directly.

Then, tell what you are willing to do, "And I will keep my stereo down when you are trying to study. If it gets too loud, I want you to let me know right away, OK?"

■ Talking — This rule sets up the expectation that you will let each other know when something needs to be negotiated. "Let's talk about how this is going every so often — just to make sure we don't slip back into old habits, OK? Let me know when the stereo level is acceptable to you, and I'll let you know when the kitchen is looking OK. Does that work for you?"

By continuing to ask through "OK" and "How is it for you" questions, you are giving your roommate the means to stay involved in the process and increasing the chances he or she will follow through with the agreement.

You might not build a lifelong friendship with this roommate — that's OK.

If both of you get more of what you need to live comfortably, study when you need to and feel just moderately in control of your environment, you've gained something from the effort. So what do you have to lose by communicating?

Mark Hurst is a doctoral intern at University Counseling Services.

INTERNATIONAL ART

Art lifts awareness

Lecturer uses art to express the human spirit

The international impact of the Beijing Women's conference was demonstrated Wednesday in Union Forum Hall with an art display and lecture by Diana Ling.

Ling spoke about her experience as a participant in the Chinese Women artists panel at the conference, where she was among 20,000 NGO (non-governmental) delegates from 189 countries.

Sponsored by Student Governing Association, Ling attended the conference representing the Women's Caucus for Art and the KSU Women's Union.

Confronting the oppression of human rights, especially in China, Ling's art integrates the traditional Chinese influences of Taoism and Confucianism, as well as the American elements of abstract expressionism.

Confucianism in art is composed of lines, shapes and dots manipulated to complement each other, which is symbolic of its goal of achieving harmony first within the family and ultimately within society.

Ling said every mark was meant to be representative of the elements of a human spirit.

"An important saying in my culture is that you have to be square and circle, confined like a circle, confined like a square," Ling said. "In that environment, kids are taught not to be naughty, to obey."

"There is a lot less of this in the U.S.," she said. "Kids have a lot more freedom here."

The abstract forms in Ling's style reflect the Taoist theory that all physical forms are a manifestation of the Tao, or the source in which all things divide into yin and yang in a balance of nature.

"All objects can transcend its form, because everything is considered equal," she said. "Its human form can be transformed into an orchid. The orchid is the human."

Ling's lecture concentrated on the significance and the controversy of the fourth international conference of women.

Some of the issues addressed in the platform were violence toward women, human and sexual rights, teaching non-sexist texts and reproductive rights.

Opposition was raised by Quoc Nguyen, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, who said he disapproved of the United Nations' selection of China because of the oppressive nature of the structure of Chinese government.

Nguyen said the "One-Child policy," which has made China the world capital of abortions, was inhumane. He also criticized China's labor exploitation for exports and executions of prisoners for organs to be sold for transplants in the international market, saying these policies make China a poor choice by the United Nations.

"China has a problem with human rights," he said. "Chinese government not only abuses their own people, but they abuse their power."

Ling responded that it was in places where oppression is the greatest that there is the strongest need for the vision of these events.

KANSAS FAMILY INITIATIVE, INC.

Youth get help from substance abuse program

Camille Wood staff reporter

Kansas took a stand against substance abuse by forming its first statewide networking organization.

Kansas Family Initiative Inc. was created as a way of raising drug-free, successful youth through healthy families, KFI Executive Director Rob Whittier said.

"Supporting families across the state is what we're all about," Whittier said.

KFI plans to do this by networking with all Kansas prevention offices that work to secure the public's well-being.

This includes police, social service, prevention coalition, the National Guard, the military and about 20 other prevention services.

Communicating regional information is what drives KFI's network. Whittier said these ties will be used to empower culturally diverse families to learn substance abuse resistance.

KFI President Michelle Voth said concern sparked the birth of the non-profit organization.

"There is no organized network, not in a systematic, structured fashion," Voth said.

Voth said this was a problem she wanted to address by finding various access points to retrieve information, and expanding KFI's core base to send that information out.

It's vital for communities to take ownership and agencies to work together, Voth said.

"If we want issues to be addressed, we've got to mobilize," Voth said.

Voth said one way KFI would communicate with prevention affiliates is through a Fax tree line which will inform them of legislation, education, resources and assistance.

Until recently, Kansas relied on a national networking system called the Community Anti-Drug Coalition of America.

Rick Dykstra, Drug Abuse

Resistance Education officer, said it was important to have a strong local network, not just a general nationally based one.

That way, even the most rural areas of Kansas can be updated as fast as metropolitan areas are, Dykstra said.

"KFI should be the guiding light to the state by exchanging information," Dykstra said.

The statewide initiative program started in 1991, when money was pooled together and four committees were established.

Voth said KFI became a board of directors in 1994, received a grant to build a state office and grew from there.

Voth said she believed the networking effort would be in full swing by the spring of 1996.

Voth said one of her goals was to have a family network coordinator in every region.

"There is nothing more precious than our children," Voth said.

Two men charged with murder of jogger

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Two men were arrested and charged Wednesday in the murder of a young woman as she jogged through one of the city's safest neighborhoods.

Herbert Haak, 25, who lives in the upscale area where Kimberly Ernest was killed, and Richard Wise, 19, were arrested at police headquarters.

They were both charged with murder, rape, kidnapping, conspiracy and involuntary deviate sexual intercourse, Homicide Chief Inspector Jerry Kane said.

Ernest, 26, a paralegal, was sexually assaulted, beaten and strangled Nov. 2 on her regular morning jog.

A man walking his dog found her body in an outside, basement-level stairwell.

The young woman did not know her attackers, who had argued with her before the murder, Kane said.

"These two birds are out there, and they happen to confront her, and she ends up dead," Kane said. "We believed all along that it was random, and we still believe it was a random attack."

The murder shocked the neighborhood of expensive row homes and small businesses near Rittenhouse Square, where residents said they had felt safe jogging or walking their dogs. Some residents, though, said there had been a series of robberies recently.

Haak was transferred from Bucks County Prison in suburban Philadelphia, where he had been held on a parole violation. Kane did not specify the previous charge against Haak.

Wise at some point shared his friend Haak's apartment, even though the men officially had different addresses, Kane said. Haak lives about five blocks from the murder scene.

The inspector refused to say what led police to the two men but said police had interviewed them repeatedly throughout the four-week investigation.

Wise and Haak were to be arraigned later on charges of murder and other offenses, Kane said.

The site of Ernest's murder and the outside of her apartment some 12 blocks away became shrines where friends and strangers alike left flowers, candles and notes. Hundreds of people, including Mayor Edward G. Rendell, attended a memorial service at a Quaker meeting house two weeks ago.

TYRONE DAVIS TO BE ON ESPN

Wildcat senior forward Tyrone Davis will be featured on ESPN's Sportscenter (cable channel 25) at 5:30 p.m. today. Davis will discuss the circumstances surrounding his departure from Baylor University and his current legal action against the school.

Farewell, and be kind to sportswriters

I have a great deal of respect for sportswriters. I can say that now because my sportswriting days are over. That's right. Beginning next semester, I'll be trading my seat in press row for a desk in a high-school classroom as a student teacher.

Sure, working as a sportswriter at the Collegian for nearly two years has been a wonderful experience. But it has also made me realize I cannot do this for the rest of my life. Why? Excuse me for sounding like Rodney Dangerfield, but I've discovered that sportswriters get "no respect."

First of all, let's take a look at the public's perception of sportswriters. I'm sure most of you have seen that old ESPN commercial depicting a beer-bellied, cigar-chomping sports reporter throwing darts to decide on his preseason national-champion pick. (He laughs wickedly as his dart lands on Idaho State.)

Lovely. I love being categorized by my profession as a dumb, lazy slob.

If anything, most of the sports reporters I've encountered have been quite the opposite of this ugly portrayal.

I learned this immediately after I began working for the Collegian. While I was looking forward to the perks of my job, like sitting in the press box and talking with coaches and players, I wasn't completely prepared for all of the other duties every sports reporter performs.

Duties like driving for hours in all types of weather to cover a game. Believe me, slipping and sliding for six hours to Ames, Iowa, is not an enjoyable little road trip. But to get the story, it's got to be done.

Duties like recording every play of every game. Believe it or not, the reporters in press row are not down there snarfing down hot dogs or betting on the game's outcome. They're intent on the action, recording every play while constantly thinking, "What is my lead going to be?"

Duties like writing on deadline. You think it's tough to take an essay exam in two hours? How's this for pressure: You have exactly one hour after the game to gather quotes, statistics and write a story. If you don't, the story won't run, and you'll probably find yourself out of a job.

Duties like dealing with angry, uncooperative coaches and players. It's difficult to write a story if a coach or player won't return your calls. It's even more difficult to write a story after a coach or player bites your head off. Although I haven't ever interviewed someone with an Albert-Belle personality, I have witnessed former OU basketball coach Billy Tubbs humiliate writers who were simply trying to do their jobs.

Duties like handling hate mail and phone calls from angry readers. I remember my first piece of hate mail. It was from a reader telling me I had no right to crush Michael Jordan's dreams of being a professional baseball player. I was so mad I called that person and explained why I was right and she was wrong. I realize that was a stupid and immature thing to do, and it never happened again. Instead, I eventually learned to handle criticism more professionally. I just threw hate mail in the trash.

Don't get me wrong — I appreciate the kind words and compliments I've received over the last couple years. My stint as a sportswriter has given me priceless experience and many fond memories. I'll miss the people I've worked with and the Kedzie Kapers. I'll miss hearing Coach Asbury's colorful quotes. I'll miss shivering in the baseball press box while Assistant Sports Information Director Dan Ballou entertains us with sound effects. I'll miss making predictions in my column. (One final prediction before I go — Chad May will never do one of those United Way commercials for the NFL.)

The bottom line — it's disheartening to see people look at the pictures on the Sports page and not even attempt to read a story the reporter has worked hard to complete. Instead, I see countless people flip the page over to read the comics or do the crossword puzzle. It's disheartening to see people hate one sports reporter (Kansas City Star columnist Jason Whitlock comes to mind) and decide that we're all the same breed. Like any other profession, we have a few duds, but there are many who do exceptional work.

All it takes to find these quality products is to put aside the stereotypical images about all reporters and just enjoy their work.

Wildcats down Emporia State, 63-57

■ Players underestimate NCAA Division II opponents

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

It wasn't easy, but when K-State had to find a way to win, it did.

"The story of the game was our inability to take care of business of the offensive side of the ball," Wildcat coach Tom Asbury said.

But with less than a minute left in the game, the Cats made five of the last six free throws to seal up a 63-57 win over Emporia State Wednesday night.

K-State (2-0) took a 32-23 lead into the locker room at halftime, but the Cats' 8-of-25 shooting in the second half let the Hornets crawl back into the game.

A 3-point basket by Hornet guard Luther Joiner gave Emporia State a 38-37 lead with 15:34 left in the game.

The Cats came right back with baskets from forward Tyrone Davis, and a three-point goal from sophomore forward Mark Young pulled the Cats away for the time being.

With less than 10 minutes left in the game, the Cats had a double-digit lead, but the Hornets persisted.

Asbury said that was to be expected when a Division II school goes up a Division I team.

"You're always going to get a Division II school's best shot, and we did," Asbury said. "They had zero to lose and everything to gain. That's what these games are about."

And Emporia State, with the aid of nine three-point goals on the game, would not die until the end. Forward Chris Henry hit a jumpshot at the 1:23 mark to pull the Hornets within one, but five K-State free throws down the stretch, one by Davis, killed the last Hornet effort.

Davis led the Cats with 22 points on perfect 9-of-9 shooting with 12 rebounds for his second consecutive double-double.

He also added three blocks to the defensive effort.

"It's a win, but nobody's happy," Davis said. "This is really a letdown to us."

The letdown for the Cats came in the shooting department, where the Cats managed only 39.3-percent shooting on the night, which for Asbury was much too reminiscent of last season.

"Bottom line is we cannot continue to shoot 39 percent," Asbury said. "That's where we were last year."

Asbury said the game was a case of his team not performing as well as it should and not a case of overlooking Emporia State.

"We couldn't get much rhythm and flow," Asbury said. "We didn't ho-hum them. We just didn't play well offensively."

Asbury would not say the Cats overlooked Emporia State. But Young, who had 12 points, including three three-point baskets, did.

"I would say we underestimated them," Young said. "I thought we were 20 points better, but we didn't play that way tonight."

Whatever the reasoning, Asbury said his young team could still take something away from the game.

"We just look at it as a learning experience and then move on," Asbury said. "It was just one of those nights."

Sophomore Aaron Swartzendruber fights for a loose ball Wednesday night against Emporia State. Swartzendruber scored a career-high 10 points in the contest.

Davis posts personal records for rebounds, blocks

Shana Newell
staff writer

For years, K-State basketball fans have commented about K-State's lack of size inside — and for the most part, they've been right.

But second-year coach Tom Asbury attempted to remedy the situation last year when he recruited forward Tyrone Davis, adding centers Gerald Eaker and Johnnie Williams this year.

The presence of Eaker and Williams on the court has improved the Wildcats' offense.

In just two regular-season games, Eaker has accumulated eight points and Williams has contributed 12. But not only have they made baskets, they've rebounded well, too.

The performance of Davis has also been improved by the new Wildcats on the court.

Removed from his natural position last year because of K-State's small size inside, Davis was depended on as K-State's center. But with Eaker and Williams as teammates, Asbury has been able to return Davis to power forward, and remarkable results have come out of the change.

Emporia State coach Ron Slaymaker said his Hornets felt the effect of the size inside.

"There's not much we could do about that inside business," Slaymaker said. "On both ends of the floor, we knew it would be a problem — but we get an A-plus for effort."

Davis recorded his second-consecutive double-double last night, scoring 22 points and grabbing 12 rebounds in the Cats' defeat of Emporia State.

Davis' first came last weekend against Bradley, when he scored 19 points and 12 rebounds. It was the fifth time in his career Davis had a double-double performance.

The 12 rebounds are a career high for Davis. His previous high mark was 11 at Kansas last year. Eight of his rebounds against Emporia State were offensive rebounds, another career high for Davis.

A preseason second-team all-Big 8 selection by Basketball Weekly, Davis shot a perfect 9-of-9 from the field against the Hornets. K-State's record is 11-of-11, held by Joe Wright and Eddie Elder of the '85 squad.

Defensively, Davis had three blocks. His previous high was two, a mark he achieved in four games last season.

Asbury said he was impressed with Davis' performance and was glad the senior was able to help the Cats in their win against Emporia State.

"Ty played well, he certainly did," Asbury said.

But Davis will be the first one to admit it's the presence of Eaker and Williams that enables him to shoot more often.

"I love having them out there," Davis said. "I can do more. I can go to the top of the key if I want and know that there will be somebody there inside to rebound if I miss."

Davis said his confidence had soared since Eaker and Williams donned Cat purple.

"It helps my confidence out a lot when I'm playing. I want the ball, and if I miss, I know someone else will score."

Tennis team completes inconsistent season

Rich Pefley
staff reporter

In any collegiate sport, teams will have their ups and downs. That about sums up the K-State women's tennis fall season.

The fall started off with the hiring of a new assistant coach, Monika Koblikova, a 1994 graduate of Brigham Young University. As a player, Koblikova led the Cougars' tennis team to top-20 finishes in each of her years with the squad.

Coach Steve Bietau said Koblikova would fit in nicely in the Wildcat program.

"She has a strong tennis background and a sense of confidence about herself that's well-founded. She's somebody I feel extremely good about having in contact with our athletes," said Bietau.

"I think she's going to be great for our program."

The Cats opened the fall season by hosting the Travelers Express Invitational in September. That tournament pitted the Cats against squads from Purdue, Oklahoma State and Oral Roberts.

The singles action got off to a rocky start as K-State's top two singles players, Karina Kuregian and Yana Dorodnova, were eliminated in the second round of play.

The doubles teams had a bit more luck. The Cats placed first and second in the top doubles draw and first and fourth in the second draw.

K-State's singles performance was highlighted by the play of sophomore Dinah Watson, the only player to win her singles draw and be on the winning team in a doubles draw in this tournament.

"Dinah was our most consistent performer throughout the year," Bietau said. "She played well in every meet and finished up with a strong performance at regionals."

Next for the Cats was a trip to Baltimore for the SkyTel National Clay Court Championships. This tournament served as an eye-opener for K-State's newcomers Lena Pilipchak and Dorodnova as they were eliminated in the first round of qualifying competion.

"They both fought pretty hard, and have a new appreciation for the level of play in college tennis," Bietau said.

Watson continued her strong play as only Wildcat woman to escape the first round. Kuregian continued to struggle as she lost in the first round. The loss dropped Kuregian to 2-4 in singles play early in the year after she posted a 27-8 record in 1994.

"She struggled to find some confidence," Bietau said.

The Cats traveled to Topeka next for the Big 8 Coaches Indoor Championships. Struggling senior Karina Kuregian, ranked as the No. 14 singles player in the country in the preseason ITA ranking, did not play.

Coach Bietau indicated two reasons for Kuregian's absence.

"One, she's not prepared to play," Bietau said. "Two, we're trying to reduce the amount of class that she's missing. She just needs to try and get some good workouts, and this will let us take a look at some other people."

Dorodnova made it all the way to the finals of the singles draw before bowing out to Christie Sim of Kansas in the championship match.

"She had a great tournament," Bietau said. "Probably the best thing was the way she fought."

Junior Nikki Lagerstrom also played well at the Indoors. After losing a tough three-set match in the first round, she won three straight matches in the consolation draw before falling to Angie Martin of Oklahoma in the finals.

Two of the Cats' doubles teams reached the quarterfinals, and the team of Dorodnova and Nicholson reached the semifinals.

At the Riviera All-American Tournament, Dorodnova was the only Cat to escape her first match in the qualifying rounds. Kuregian was defeated in the first round of the main singles draw as she continued to struggle.

The final tournament of the fall season was the Rolex Regional Championships played at the University of Utah.

In consolation singles action, Kuregian won two matches before bowing out to Claudia Gutierrez of New Mexico.

Watson also played in the consolation bracket, where she lost a tough three-setter in the second round to Ande Tulp of Weber State.

In the main double draw, the team of Kuregian and Dorodnova were defeated by Meraz and Gutierrez of New Mexico 2-6, 6-1, 6-4.

The theme of the fall season seemed to be inconsistency, Bietau said.

"We play a tough fall schedule," Bietau said. "We play against some of the best players in the country and you have to play very well to win."

"We made some progress, but there was no area we were great in," Bietau said. "There are a number of areas where we made significant progress. There were periods of very high-quality work, but no one was able to sustain it."

Kuregian finished the fall campaign with a 5-8 record in singles play. She finished doubles action with a 3-4 mark teaming with Dorodnova and Lena Pilipchak. Pilipchak posted an even 5-5 mark in singles.

Lagerstrom finished singles at 4-5 and doubles 2-2 while teaming with Watson. Watson's singles record was 6-6.

Nicholson finished with an even 4-4 mark in singles but teamed with Dorodnova to post a 7-3 mark in doubles action. Dorodnova had a record of 8-5 in singles play.

The Cats don't open the spring season until late January, and Bietau said the break would be good for his players.

"They can focus more heavily on school these last few weeks," Bietau said.

One other focus will be conditioning. The coaching staff is allowed eight hours per week with the players according to NCAA rules. Only two of those hours can be spent on tennis.

"We encourage them to spend time on the court in addition to the two hours we have with them," Bietau said.

Cats pull out win at Wichita State

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

It wasn't pretty, but K-State escaped Levitt Arena with a 54-44 win over Wichita State Tuesday night. The Cats are now 3-0, their first such start since 1992.

The Wildcats went into the break tied 25-25 with the Shockers, but the team used a 22-5 run at the start of the second to take command of the game. Junior wing Missy Decker scored eight of the Cats' first 10 points in the half, including back-to-back three-pointers.

"We played much better in the second half," K-State coach Brian Agler said. "But we actually shot worse."

Though the Cats hit only 13-of-51 shots (.255) for the game, Agler said he was not concerned with the way the offense performed.

"Our offense worked pretty well — we just missed our shots."

The Cats committed 16 turnovers while recording only eight assists. Agler said those numbers were partially due to poor shooting but were also affected by K-State's ability to draw fouls.

"I think a lot of it had to do with missed shots," Agler said. "We were running good offense and getting open, but the shots wouldn't go down."

"But we also got to the line a lot, and you don't get an assist for hitting your free throws. And one of our goals was to shoot more free throws than our opponents."

The Cats hit 24-of-34 from the stripe, including 8-of-10 from junior post Andria Jones.

Sophomore wing Brit Jacobson paced the Cats with 16 points. Jones added 12 points and a game-high nine rebounds, and Decker put in 10 points.

K-State next takes the floor Friday against Grambling State in the Lady Tiger Classic in Memphis, Tenn.

Saturday, the Cats will face either Alabama State or Memphis.

► MORE FOOTBALL AWARDS

Junior receiver Kevin Lockett and senior defensive end Dirk Ochs were selected Wednesday for the 1995 Hitachi/CFA Scholar Athlete Team. Both were named academic all-Big 8 earlier this week.

K-State and Wyoming are the only two teams with two players on the squad. Hitachi will donate $1,000 to each high school attended by a player on the team. Lockett graduated from Booker T. Washington High School in Tulsa, Okla., and Ochs graduated from Shawnee Mission South in Overland Park.

In other awards, Wildcat defensive tackle Tim Colston was named to the Football Coaches Association All-America team Wednesday, his second such distinction this season.

Last week, Colston was chosen as a first-team all-American by the Walter Camp Foundation.

She said that although beer was an added touch to the recreation area, it was not going to make the Union rich because students do not want to go to the Union to drink.

"Most students will go to Aggieville with their friends if they want a beer," Eddy said.

The amount of beer sales per week is smaller than expected.

"While the recreation area is selling about three kegs a week, Union Station is only selling about half of that," Eddy said.

She said the initial investment has been covered, and at this time, neither the recreation area or Union Station are losing money.

Connaughton said beer sales would not be affected by Union renovations.

Some students think beer sales are a nice addition to the recreation area and Union Station because they do not have to leave campus.

"I don't think I have seen anyone abuse it. It's nice after taking a test because it is within walking distance," John Diesel, junior in business, said.

Other students said they thought beer is sales in the Union were good, but price is an issue.

"I think its nice that it's there. I wish it wasn't $1.50," Kate Adams, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said.

Other students think beer sales will only add to the problems the campus already has.

"I'm against it because of all the problems we have now. They can get it somewhere else," Yulanda Kirk, sophomore in accounting, said.

mentary education, said she has learned dance under other instructors and enjoys Yagerline's ability to make the class fun.

"She has a type of leadership in the class where you don't feel threatened, but you want to do your best work for her. She expects everyone to do well and makes things entertaining," Dunbar said. "She's going to bring a lot to this program, and I think she came at a great time."

Yagerline said her opportunity to merge her love of dance with teaching created a perfect mix.

"I'm enjoying it here at K-State," Yagerline said. "I keep busy, but it's nice to be doing what you love. Dancing and teaching is what I love."

SPEED

"What we do now is allow the Legislature to have a debate on this issue," Matson said.

"The debate has already begun. I'm confident other lawmakers will have other suggestions. Our state is not wasting any time in moving forward," Matson said.

Pena in his letter said that speed-related crashes killed 101 people in Kansas in 1994 and cost $172 million.

"When Congress allowed 65 mph speed limits on some rural interstates in 1987, this action resulted in an additional loss of 500 lives and $900 million in economic costs to the nation every year," Pena wrote.

Graves has been a strong supporter of allowing states, not the federal government, to determine their own speed limits, although he has declined to endorse a specific speed.

Generally, the governor supports increasing the speed limit on some Kansas highways, Matson said.

The Special Committee on Transportation made its recommendation Tuesday to the Legislature after holding a series of hearings across the state.

Its chairman, Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, said the recommendation was only a starting point for the coming debate.

Congress imposed the 55 mph speed limit in 1974 as a measure to improve the fuel efficiency of cars during the Arab oil embargo.

Before then, the speed limit in Kansas for four-lane highways was 75 during the daytime and 70 at night.

On two-lane highways, the limit was 70 mph during daylight and 65 mph after nightfall.

FROGS

Post said.

It was replaced with a human nerve and muscle function lab, in which students perform tasks related to their own bodies and observe their own responses, she said.

One of the experiments includes squeezing a rubber ball in one hand for 180 seconds to observe strength and how it diminishes over time.

Other experiments include human reaction times and reflexes.

Although using the ball is a good exercise, Post said she was not sure whether students were learning the same amount they did with the frogs.

Sandra Goodenough, sophomore in biology, took the course last year while the frogs were being used and said the department should have discontinued the use of the fetal pig instead of the frogs.

"It is more important for students to learn about the functioning of the anatomy than to learn just what it looks like, and that is what they do with the fetal pig," she said.

The fetal pigs were not cut from the budget because they are cheaper to use than the frogs, Williams said.

"You can have a lot of students observe one pig, but frogs are living specimens. You must do the exercise within an hour," he said.

Pigs can also be preserved for longer periods of time, unlike the frogs that were used.

Williams said the discontinued use of the frogs was a disadvantage for those students that are going on in a professional health field. Williams said he felt they would get the experience they need in upper-level courses.

Caroline Andrade, freshman in biology, said hands-on experiments probably helped students remember more.

"As far as money is concerned, we have the best we can on our budget, but I think it would be great if we could have more hands-on experience," Andrade said.

Dean & playwright

■ Local playwright and faculty member has plays produced in New York City

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

Getting a play produced in Manhattan is almost akin to Atlas holding up the world.

It's even harder in New York City's Manhattan (the other apple), whether it be Broadway, off-Broadway or off-off-Broadway.

Judith Zivanovic, associate dean of arts and sciences, is dissing that tired cliché by having one of her short plays recently produced in New York as part of the three-act production "Three Slices of Life to Go" at the Inner Space Theater.

This is Zivanovic's fourth play produced in New York City and the third in 1995.

"I've had a great deal of excitement watching the plays happen," Zivanovic said. The show ran Oct. 17-18 and 24-25.

Zivanovic said she was interested in providing good parts for women.

In her short play for "Three Slices," Zivanovic wrote a piece about two young girls dealing with the ambiguities and contradictions of human sexuality.

"I deliberately wanted two actresses in their 20s," Zivanovic said. "I wanted people to reflect — to suspend disbelief."

She said the audience was always aware the two actresses were children at one time.

"I wanted to get people to think about sex education."

Zivanovic was head of the speech department at South Dakota State University before she came to K-State in 1988 to become associate dean.

She is also director of the arts and sciences honors program and a professor of theater, teaching avant-garde theater and drama.

Teaching dramatic literature and theater history at South Dakota, Zivanovic had never considered writing for the theater herself.

After beginning to write original plays, she began sending her plays to various theater workshops and competitions around the country in 1976, hoping to have one of her plays performed.

Although writing is something of a second career for Zivanovic, she said she wasn't making any money at it. And she's had her share of headaches, too.

For instance, Zivanovic said she once wrote a play about a talking dog, but, soon after her play began circulating, a well-known playwright came out with a play that explored the same idea.

Zivanovic said theater companies might keep a play for many years before taking it to the stage for production. This can be discouraging for some playwrights.

Nevertheless, Zivanovic continues writing.

She does most of her writing during the holidays and her vacations.

"My days are pretty busy and don't lend themselves to a lot of writing," she said.

Recently, Zivanovic has had the opportunity to take up residency in various writing programs around the world.

Zivanovic said that last year, she spent some time at a writer's colony in Dorset, Vermont. She has also written at a workshop in a castle in Scotland and with the Wurlitzer Foundation in Taos, New Mexico.

Writing workshops are a nice way of getting that concerted effort to write, she said.

However, it's no simple task getting a play produced.

Zivanovic said having some of her plays produced helped in getting her future work staged.

"There are a lot of people who come to these shows — producers, publishers and agents."

She still sends her work to many companies nationally each year, as do many people.

"Some of the national companies get 1,000 or 2,000 entries a year," she said. "Now, they've started charging reading fees or requesting letters of recommendation."

It also helps if your play fits into the repertoire of the company you're sending it to.

"Some companies have themes they might want to explore with their plays," she said.

She said she had no expectation of her work ever being produced at K-State.

"We do student work," she said. "That's what I like to see on the campus."

Zivanovic said she has kept up with contemporary theater through her subscriptions to various theatrical magazines, reading many plays — which fill every conceivable open space in her cramped Eisenhower Hall office — and seeing theater in New York.

Zivanovic's playwriting shows no symptoms of remission.

Her latest play explores the life of Midwestern stage star Lotta Crabtree. In it, she has integrated scenes from Crabtree's stage credits and even some musical numbers.

"It's a demanding play," Zivanovic said. "I see someone like Bernadette Peters in it."

For Zivanovic, putting it together is getting easier.

Judy Zivanovic, associate dean of arts and sciences, holds a copy of the script of the play that ran in New York City's Inner Space Theater. Zivanovic's short play was produced as a part of the three-act production "Three Slices of Life to Go."

Dykstra said working in the DARE program had established a positive link with the children.

"We're here to help them, and I think they know that," Dykstra said.

Working as a police officer has made him especially attuned to the community's need to take care of business, he said.

"We need to take charge of our communities," Dykstra said. "I wish I could convince citizens that they have the power to make a change."

Citizens and police officers need to work hard together to form a better society, he said.

He said this should include individuals, families, businesses and churches.

"Police officers alone cannot solve the problem of crime," Dykstra said.

Dykstra said he kept plugging away, trying to motivate people to get involved with prevention. Besides working at the schools, he tries to reach adults through a prevention radio show on KMKF-FM 101.5.

He taught others how to establish a radio show when he spoke about "DARE on the Air" at a worldwide DARE conference in Houston in August.

6 Degrees of Kevin Bacon

Pride yourself on movie trivia? Try this game — story by Stephanie Fuqua

It starts innocently enough. Name a movie actor — say, Pierce Brosnan.

Then, link actors together by the movies they costar in. Say Pierce Brosnan and Robin Williams in "Mrs. Doubtfire." Robin Williams and John Lithgow in "The World According to Garp." John Lithgow and Kevin Bacon in "Footloose."

You've just played the Six Degrees of Kevin Bacon.

The point of the game is that Kevin Bacon is the center of the movie universe, and everyone can be linked back to him.

Nonbelievers scoff, saying, "Surely there is someone who can't be linked. I'm going to find it." And that's how the game turns nonbelievers into believers.

"It's addictive. Very addictive," Erisson Hastur, of Tempe, Ariz., said. Hastur is the webmaster of a World Wide Web page devoted to the Kevin Bacon game.

"Although, come to think of it, it's not so much an addiction as it is a magnet. I mean, when I'm telling people about it, and they say something along the lines of 'Oh, get a life!' and then they come back five minutes later and start playing it, that's something beyond addiction," Hastur said.

The temptation to challenge a group of players can be high. Ethan Sampson, senior at Kent Denver High School in Denver, Colo., has also met disbelievers who try to test the believers.

"The other thing that is interesting is pretty much every time I have played, there has been some kid around — not involved in the game or conversation or whatever — and he or she will start yelling out random people and testing the group," Sampson said.

However, dealing with the unbelievers is the best part of the game, said Stephanie Salm, a Harvard sophomore who also maintains a Bacon Web page.

"It's fun to meet someone unfamiliar to the game since they can never believe that it is only Kevin Bacon that this applies to. 'No, but you could do that with anyone.' Not true," Salm said.

"Dealing with a new person can be fun because they think of lots of people to link that may seem hard but can be made easy when you pull out some obscure film like 'Queen's Logic' or the all-time best linker — 'JFK.' Everyone in the world was in 'JFK.'"

Once you're hooked into the game, the natural thing is to ask what the rules are. There's no instruction booklet for this game, because it's mainly learned through word of mouth.

Instead, it depends on which group you are playing with and what part of the country you are in. Some people allow television crossovers. Others allow cameos. Some purists say there is no way they would ever allow television appearances.

"Using television is absolutely against the rules. Under no circumstances can you use TV," Salm said. "It's like using family relations: Gary Oldman was in 'The Scarlet Letter' with Demi Moore, who is married to Bruce Willis. It just doesn't work that way."

The rules can be even more stringent than that.

Hastur is a member of the Baconsortium, a group of people from across the country who play the game together via the Web. A self-proclaimed purist, he insists that mainstream movies are the only one to be used.

"To wit, they have to have been in a mainstream movie, not just little 'art' films, not just pornographic films, etc. Hopefully, they've been in at least one film that has been released in America. Not a requirement, certainly, but it helps a lot," Hastur said.

"The way the Baconsortium plays, you can use only movies. No television shows, no made-for-television movies, no miniseries. Just movies."

Cameos are fine to use, Hastur said, but people who are extras cannot be used. Voice credits, such as Whoopi Goldberg in the "Lion King," are also questionable.

"If that's the quickest — or most stylish — route, then go for it, but be prepared to come up with an alternate route, in case the person you're playing with doesn't like voice credits," he said.

Jeff Macfee is a graduate of University of Texas at Austin and also maintains a Kevin Bacon game page. He said he plays the pure variety.

"Maximum of six hops. No television, no directors, no relations," Macfee said.

"I've played less 'strict' variations where TV and directors and relatives are all allowed, or where there are no limits on links. I prefer to play the 'pure' way only without a limit on links. It's just more impressive the shorter you make it."

And in case you're wondering, the players explain that six degrees means six steps, not six people. Bacon counts as the first person, and you're allowed five other people to connect with him. Simple links, one or two people, can often be the best.

"It's most enjoyable to play the Kevin Bacon Game with simple links," Matthew Bennett, junior at North Springs High School in Atlanta, Ga., said.

"Probably connecting Spike Lee in one step was the most fun. Spike Lee was in 'Malcolm X' with a John F. Kennedy look-alike. That same JFK was in the movie 'JFK' with Kevin Bacon."

Once you start playing though, it can be hard to find challenges. Most of the people who have Web pages say they only get challenged by requests on the page. Others find challenges even more difficult.

"Walking down the street with a friend, we passed by the poster for 'To Wong Foo,'" Macfee said. "In the time between when I could read it, and when I actually passed it — about 10 seconds — I had solved all three of the actors on the poster," Macfee said with a sigh.

"That's how I get most of my challenges these days, through inanimate objects."

But don't think that once you've played or worn out all the challenges you can think of that you can just stop. Once the Six Degrees of Kevin Bacon is in your head, it's there to stay.

"It's hard to stop," Macfee said. "It is the heroin of the gaming world."

Harrison Ford was in "Raiders of the Lost Ark" with Karen Allen.

Karen Allen was in "Animal House" with Kevin Bacon.

Tim Curry was in "Rocky Horror Picture Show" with Susan Sarandon.

Susan Sarandon was in "Bull Durham" with Kevin Costner.

Kevin Costner was in "JFK" with Kevin Bacon.

Kevin Kline was in "French Kiss" with Meg Ryan.

Meg Ryan was in "Sleepless in Seattle" with Tom Hanks.

Tom Hanks was in "Apollo 13" with Kevin Bacon.

Maybe she vomited pea soup and levitated a lot

James Wylie Parker recently walked into the studios of WDFW-TV in Dallas during a noon newscast and confessed to murdering his 65-year-old mother. The woman was killed by repeated stab wounds and by the torching of her home. Parker, a former veteran's hospital mental patient, said in a live interview that he decided to kill his mother after realizing that morning that she was evil. "He seemed pretty lucid, except at one point he said, 'I'm Lee Harvey Oswald,'" Richard Ray, WDFW-TV reporter, said. Obviously, debate will rage on for decades about whether Parker acted alone in murdering his mother or whether he was merely the patsy for a much wider plot.

Big Brother is reading your mind (sometimes)

The Central Intelligence Agency has confirmed that it spent $20 million on so-called "remote intelligence" in the last two decades, called Operation Stargate. This method of intelligence collection involved certain CIA agents using their psychic abilities to solve cases. The intelligence-gathering technique was reportedly effective some 15 percent of the time. Costs of Operation Stargate probably ran so high because of all the 900 number calls to the Psychic Friends Network. See the full story on page 10.

If it stinks, they swim

Researchers at Duke University are conducting research on ways to develop a contraceptive that prevents human sperm from smelling their way to the eggs they want to fertilize. Researchers are focusing on trying to find which scents attract sperm and block them from smelling those scents. One thing known for sure is that both sperm and men are strongly repelled by the smell of Charlie and any perfume sold through Mary Kay Cosmetics.

Can I be next? Please?

A female prostitute arrested in Denver was jailed in the same cell as 60 men. She ended up having sex with two of them during her overnight sojourn. A spokesperson for the sheriff's department said the mistaken co-ed jail arrangement was partly due to confusion about the genders of the other incarcerated prisoners, who reportedly are often transsexuals and transvestites. The Jerry Springer Show is said to be looking into taping a show at the jail under the title "I Boinked a Jailhouse Hooker ... And I Was In Drag!"

Be our guest, now pay up

Vice President Al Gore and his wife Tipper Gore were the talk of Washington 'round about Halloween. They dressed up as the title characters from the blockbuster animated Walt Disney movie "Beauty and the Beast." Now it's time to pay. Disney is demanding more than $8,600 in expenses for the costumes that the corporation lent to the Second Couple. Fortunately, the Democratic National Committee is picking up the tab. It's not as if the $8,600 could be more effectively spent on trying to re-elect President Clinton, who probably is following Jiminy Cricket's advice and wishing upon a star.

► DRUG ABUSE

Mother sells son to settle crack debt

Associated Press

DETROIT — To some neighbors in an area thick with prostitution and drugs, the 15-year-old boy appeared normal, even happy.

Police, however, have begun to unravel the story of a teen-ager who spent months with drug dealers and users — a world where, authorities say, his mother sold him to settle her $1,000 crack cocaine debt.

Acting on an anonymous tip, police found the boy early Tuesday morning in a small, run-down house. A man found with him, described by police as a drug dealer with a long record, was arrested. Police said the mother gave her son to a different dealer, who was still at large.

"He's crying a lot," said the boy's grandmother, who saw her grandson Tuesday for the first time in months. She said he appeared addicted to crack. He had lost a lot of weight but seemed otherwise OK, she said.

Fifteen-year-old Jacqui Jones, who lives next door to the house where the boy was found, said she had talked to him a couple of times.

"He didn't seem like he was upset or down or nothing," she said. "He seemed happy."

The boy told TV station WKBD in suburban Southfield on Tuesday that he went willingly to work for a drug dealer, but left when the man mistreated him. He then went to work for another dealer, he said.

"It's hard out there," he said, adding that he was not forced to deal drugs to pay off his mother's debt. In fact, he said, his mother asked him not to go.

But according to a report in today's editions of the Detroit News, the teenager told police and his grandmother that he had chosen to stay with drug dealers in hopes of raising cash to pay for an apartment where he, his mother and younger sister and brother could live together again.

"He said he did it to bring his family together," the grandmother told the paper.

The boy's 33-year-old mother gave a similar account to the Detroit Free Press in an interview published today. "He wanted to sell drugs," the woman said during a telephone interview from the Wayne County Jail, where she was being held on an unrelated burglary charge for which she had failed to appear in court. "If I owed money for drugs, the dope man would've come to kill me first. It wouldn't have been about my son."

But Sgt. Shelley Foy of the police child-abuse unit said she was convinced the boy was sold and that he went along with it to protect his mother. She said his response was common in neglect cases involving drug-addicted parents.

The boy's grandmother said she talked to him for about 10 minutes at a juvenile detention center. She said he told her, "Mama, I need help."

"He's as sweet as he can be," the grandmother said. "He's got one hangup: It's his mother. He loves her."

The boy appeared in juvenile court and was charged with delivery of cocaine, possession of cocaine with intent to deliver and truancy. His next court appearance was scheduled for Dec. 13.

The boy had been living with his grandmother until he disappeared several months ago, but the mother had custody. The grandmother said she planned to ask the juvenile court to give custody to her. Foy said the whereabouts of the boy's father were unknown.

Police said they could not confirm reports that the boy was forced to smoke crack when he was hungry so his captors could save on food and that he was used as a sex slave. Inspector Michael Hall said police were awaiting the results of a medical examination.

"He's definitely a victim, regardless of what the circumstances were," Hall said.

The grandmother said she reported the boy missing six months ago, but that police said they could not act because she was not his legal guardian.

Police began working on the case earlier this month when they got a tip that the boy was being kept in the house and forced to work, Foy said.

Residents of the neighborhood where the boy was found said the area is known for gangs and crime.

"There are gunshots all the time around here," resident Clarence Crosby said. "I keep to myself and try to keep my kids out of the street."

CIA spent $20 million on ESP

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — For 20 years, the United States has secretly used psychics in attempts to hunt down Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi, find plutonium in North Korea and help drug enforcement agencies, the CIA and others confirm.

The ESP spying operations — codenamed "Stargate" — were unreliable, but three psychics continued to work out of Fort Meade, Md., at least into July, researchers who evaluated the program for the CIA said Tuesday.

The program has cost the government $20 million, said Ray Hyman, a psychology professor at the University of Oregon in Eugene, who helped prepare the study.

He said the psychics were used by various agencies for remote viewing — using extrasensory perception to provide information from distant sites.

Up to six psychics at any time worked at assignments that included trying to hunt down Gadhafi before the 1986 U.S. bombing of Libya, find plutonium in North Korea in 1994, and locate kidnapped Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier in Italy.

Gadhafi was not injured in the bombing. Dozier, kidnapped by the Red Brigades in Italy in 1981, was freed by Italian police after 42 days. News reports at the time said the police were assisted by an undisclosed number of U.S. State and Defense Department specialists using electronic surveillance equipment.

But Dale Graff, a former director of the Defense Intelligence Agency's ESP program, told ABC's "Nightline" on Tuesday that psychics provided the name of the city and the building where Dozier was held.

The study reported mixed success with the psychics. Hyman was skeptical, while his co-author, Jessica Utts, a professor of statistics at the University of California-Davis, said some of the results were promising.

"My conclusion was that there's no evidence these people have done anything helpful for the government," Hyman said.

Utts, however, said the government psychics were accurate about 15 percent of the time. In some tests, when given a series of four choices, they picked the right answer a third of the time.

"I think they would be effective if they were used in conjunction with other intelligence," she said.

CIA spokesman Mark Mansfield confirmed the existence of Stargate and the study.

"The CIA is reviewing available programs regarding parapsychological phenomena, mostly remote viewing, to determine their usefulness to the intelligence community," he said.

But he noted that when the CIA first sponsored research on the program in the 1970s, the program was found to be unpromising and was later turned over to the Defense Department.

The Defense Intelligence Agency made the psychics available to government departments that needed information, Hyman said. At one time, as many as six worked for the government.

Mansfield declined to comment on the psychics at Fort Meade or specific incidents.

Joe McMoneagle, who worked for 17 years as a psychic spy, told ABC that the psychics were instrumental in helping find missing Americans during the 1979 Iran hostage crisis.

He said they described the inside and outside of the building and even the captors' uniforms.

William Green, a Customs official involved in the 1989 hunt for Charles Jordan, a one-time Customs agent wanted on drug charges, said the psychics accurately described that Jordan would be found in Wyoming near an Indian burial site.

"It was almost spooky or something," Green told ABC. "It couldn't have been much more accurate."

However, a former CIA technical director who monitored ESP programs within the intelligence community said he wasn't aware of any significant results from the psychics. The man, identified on "Nightline" only as Norm, said the psychics offered some interesting results, and maybe even tantalizing, but beyond that it left more questions than it answered.

He said sometimes they would have amazing perception, but on unrelated issues. "The gold nugget somehow tends to elude us," he said.

The psychics were regularly tested by the Stanford Research Institute and later Science Applications International Corp., both south of San Francisco.

Both Utts and Hyman said the research was faulty in some respects. The government often used only one judge to determine how close the psychics had come to the right answer. That should have been duplicated by other judges, they said.

Who's Cool in America?

(http://www.teleport.com/~getcool/)

The people at Who's Cool in America have set up the "Cool Board" to be the final authority on who's cool. Every person in the world deemed cool enough is listed in the Registry.

This was no doubt created so cool people could meet each other without bothering with all of the geeks in the world. It also includes a cool links page, with a listing of all of the "cool" links on the World Wide Web.

Each month, Who's Cool gives away a pair of sunglasses to a deserving cool person. And after people are registered, they may purchase a "Who's Cool" T-shirt to impress friends. This is a very cool place.

A Beatles home page

(http://www.abctelevision.com/beatles.html)

With the return of the Beatles, people can't get enough of the boys from Liverpool. Here is a great reference spot for all of the new Beatles' information.

The trivia section is well worth the time to visit. A certain stranger in Beatles' history is listed here — check it out. The page also includes links to the Life magazine special Beatles page and the Official Capitol Records page.

Garcia Later!

(http://www.sirius.com/~jmello/jerry.html)

For those of us who couldn't make it to San Francisco in August, this Jerry Garcia tribute page illustrates the event well. It includes pictures from the San Francisco tributes as well as an animated tribute to Jerry.

Surfers can listen to a couple songs from the last Dead show here, which I highly recommend. The best part of this page are the links to the various Grateful Dead sites and other fun places to visit.

Communism Online

(http://www.tiac.net/users/brownh/cp-usa/cp-usa.html)

The Communist Party in the United States has set up a neat homepage. It includes a section with a mission statement of the Communist party. A couple of journal articles on communism are also dropped in.

It does have a good collection of resources for the working-class struggle that gives links to other left-wing organizations, including the National Organization of Women and the African National Congress. For an added bonus, it stocks an archive of Karl Marx's and Frederick Engels' works, in case of insomnia.

Wired!

(http://www.hotwired.com/wired/)

Often considered the hottest internet magazine online, "Wired Magazine" is appealing for all netheads. Articles from back issues are available to read.

It has one of the best archives of articles concerning privacy on the net, alone making it worth a visit. And, of course, surfers can subscribe to wired or order merchandise here as well.

► NATIONAL CRIME

Man admits to murdering neighbors as a teen 20 years ago

Associated Press

LAKE CITY, Minn. — Twenty years after a small-town mayor and his wife were shot to death, a former next-door neighbor has come forward and confessed he murdered them when he was 14 to see what it was like to kill.

John Claypool, 34, kept the secret until his conscience could bear it no longer, investigators said.

"Thanks to the Almighty for giving John Claypool the guidance and resolve to do what was right and come forward, ending the years of doubt, uncertainty and frustration," said Nick O'Hara, supervisor for the state Bureau of Criminal Apprehension on Wednesday.

Claypool was jailed and was expected to plead guilty to second-degree murder in the slayings of Wilmer and Verona Strickland, who were found dead in their house on Dec. 21, 1975, in this town about 60 miles southeast of Minneapolis.

Under state guidelines, Claypool could serve about 10 years in prison.

Authorities said he told them he was high on marijuana and drunk the night of the killings.

"And he was curious to find out what it was like to kill somebody," County Attorney James Nordstrom, said.

Claypool went to his neighbors' home around 2 a.m. and told them he was locked out of his house. When they let him in, Claypool shot Wilmer Strickland with a .22-caliber rifle, then went to a bedroom and shot Verona Strickland at close range as she huddled between a bed and the wall, police said.

The Stricklands' son was dropping off Christmas presents when he found the bodies.

Claypool was one of the original suspects in the case, but there was never enough evidence to charge him, authorities said.

The unsolved killings were assigned to a "cold case" unit in 1993.

On Oct. 16, authorities trying to refocus attention on the case offered a $25,000 reward.

Rochester Police Sgt. Jack LeClair, a member of a task force working on the case, said he believes that when the case was reopened, Claypool became worried and decided to confess.

Residents of Lake City, a picturesque town of about 4,400 near the setting for the first book in the "Little House on the Prairie" series, were relieved that the case was solved.

"It was a very big shock to the community at the time," Police Chief Robert Schmidt told the Post-Bulletin of Rochester.

"It has been an issue that's been talked about yearly, it's never been dropped. It's always been on the minds of all the citizens," Schmidt said.

► ANTI-CRIME PROGRAM

First of 75 drug houses destroyed

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY — Gov. Bill Graves and other officials watched as members of the Kansas National Guard demolished a drug house, the first of 75 buildings being torn down in the city under an anti-crime program.

The National Guard troops used a scoop loader and bulldozer Wednesday to demolish the house in the northeast part of the city.

First Lt. Robert Lawrence of Pittsburg, a member of Company C of the 891st Engineer Battalion in Fort Scott, led the demolition team. He will supervise the demolition of the remaining houses used in the past for the distribution of illegal drugs. Members of the Army and Air National Guard will perform the work.

The work is being financed through a $260,000 federal drug control grant approved by the Kansas Criminal Justice Coordinating Council. The city contributed an additional $154,000.

Graves was joined at the first demolition by Attorney General Carla Stovall, U.S. Attorney Randy Rathbun, Brig. Gen. Ronald Tinscher of the Kansas National Guard and Mayor Carol Marinovich.

"We at the state level perform our jobs better when we have input from the neighborhood level," Graves said. Stovall called the grant an antibiotic against crime and drugs.

KSU student learning to live with HIV

Kim Heffling
staff reporter

The name of the student in this story has been changed to protect her identity.

Each day for Lisa Jones is a race against the clock.

In April, Jones tested positive for the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV.

But Jones, junior in social work, doesn't appear any different than any other 21-year-old on campus or in Aggieville.

In fact, with her cropped hair and overalls, she could resemble the person sitting next to you in chemistry or living in your apartment complex — possibly even your girlfriend.

"You would think I would be a very pale, thin, very sickly individual," Jones said. "At times people become that — but that sometimes takes years.

"What the public needs to realize is that when you disclose you're HIV positive, you can lead a healthy life for 10 years or more."

Sitting on the couch at her home, Jones doesn't look like someone who must worry about possibly losing her part-time job in the health-care profession if her condition is brought public.

Nor does she look like someone who could die young.

But Jones said her daily routine hasn't differed much since she tested positive for the HIV virus.

"The only thing that has changed with the HIV-test result is my life has been shortened," she said. "Thus, what I wanted to accomplish in 20 years will now hopefully be accomplished in eight-to-10."

Jones is not alone in her struggle with HIV.

According to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, 1,517 Kansans have the AIDS virus. This number does not include people infected with the HIV virus nor those who tested positive for the virus in another state and now reside in Kansas.

Contrary to the beliefs of many people, New York and California aren't the only states with a rising AIDS population.

"Looking at raw numbers they may have more, but per capita rural women are the group with the highest rising numbers," Reita Currie, R.N. health educator at Lafene Health Center, said.

The entire state of Kansas is considered a rural area.

Therefore, Jones, as well as all women in Kansas, are part of the fastest-growing risk group for the AIDS virus.

Receiving confirmation she was HIV positive wasn't easy for Jones. All together, she has had five HIV/AIDS tests.

On the first test, she tested positive for HIV, followed by two tests with a negative result and two

Local events planned for World AIDS Day

Kim Heffling
staff reporter

Today is World AIDS Day.

In concordance with the event, the Manhattan AIDS Project will be sponsoring a candlelight vigil at 6 tonight in the Manhattan Town Center in the entrance next to Poyntz Avenue.

The event will include prayer and brief messages from Mayor Edith Stunkel; Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan; and a few local ministers.

"It will be a time of remembering those who died from AIDS and those living with the disease," said Gregory Eiselein, Manhattan AIDS Project board member and assistant professor of English.

In addition, Lafene Health Center will be sponsoring a proclamation advocating AIDS awareness, read by Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, at 12:15 p.m. today at the north side of the K-State Student Union.

Following the proclamation, chimes will ring 15 times in observance of 15 years of the AIDS epidemic at 12:30 p.m.

During the chime ringing, participants will be asked to stand in

40 years ago, Rosa Parks made history

Sara Edwards
staff writer

A simple action by a woman who just wanted to keep her seat on a bus lead to great changes in America.

Forty years ago, Rosa Parks decided she would not go to the back of the bus. Her actions led to the Montgomery Bus Boycott and the Civil Rights Movement.

Today, Dec. 1, America honors her with national Rosa Parks Day.

"I think she initiated a change needed for African Americans and all people. She displayed her own human rights, which were being ignored," said Dina Bennett, coordinator of multicultural student organizations.

Elaine Steele, co-founder of the Rosa and Raymond Parks Institute, said there are still racist overtones in society. But, as Parks would say, people have to make up their own minds and hearts, Steele said.

Nathaniel Scott, junior in secondary education and sociology, said there is a lot of underlying racism in society today.

Some examples at the university level were tracking, poor programming and recruitment, Scott said.

"We need better recruitment for academics than sports for blacks, because the majority of students on campus think that blacks are here to play sports, which is a misconception," Scott said.

However, the Civil Rights Movement spurred by

Tuzla awaits American GIs

Associated Press

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — This smoggy Communist-era town, where 20,000 U.S. soldiers will base their mission in Bosnia, is sinking into old salt mines and flooded with refugees who resent the peace plan that will bring the GIs here.

U.S. soldiers will be greeted by residents with open arms and high expectations that American know-how and dollars will solve many of the problems caused by nearly four years of war.

Atop the list is an end to the fighting, in which an estimated 200,000 people have died or disappeared.

"If the NATO troops can bring peace, I'll be happy," said Eldin Tabucic, 38, the director of Tuzla's only theater.

Mayor Selim Beslagic has higher hopes — and expectations.

He said he wants the Americans to repair the roads over which their armored vehicles will pass. He wants them to rebuild power lines, destroyed in the fighting, and reopen the railroad that once carried the coal and chemicals that formed the city's prewar industrial base.

Tuzla's coal-fired power plant is turning out only 8 percent of the electricity it did before the war. The area's coal mines yield just a quarter of what they used to. Factory production is down 70 percent.

The mayor dreams peace and foreign aid will get the factories running again and restore the rail line that runs to the Adriatic port of Ploce. The line passes through mountains that, until September, were held by Serbs, and bridges all along it have been destroyed.

When will it be fixed?

"Ask the American generals," Beslagic said, smiling.

Role models

KSU athletes share stories with elementary students

Chris May
staff reporter

Thursday was a day many first graders will never forget.

Eight K-State athletes read to a first-grade class at Bluemont Elementary School as part of their independent reading class.

They each brought a book to read to the kids, expect for Johnnie Williams, junior center for the basketball team, who made up a story to share with the class.

"It's about a tiger named Mark who was adopted," Williams said.

No one ever came to read to Williams' school when he was growing up, but he wasn't letting that stop him. Williams has also been out to Woodrow Wilson School reading to kids for his storytelling class.

"This feels great," Williams said. "I love little kids."

Joining Williams from the men's basketball team was junior center Gerald Eaker and junior guard Anton Hubert.

said he was glad to be there.

"It means a lot to the kids," Dominguez said.

Dominguez read "My House" to the students because it had a lot of good pictures in it for the kids to follow along with, he said.

Munson said he was hoping to show the students a different side of the football team and to get closer to the community by being there.

"I wanted to touch base with the community. With our busy practice schedule, it's hard to meet them," Munson said. "This way we can give something back to the community and be more personable with them."

Former athletes came back to talk to Munson's high school about college, but Munson said he was hoping to clarify some things by talking to the first graders.

"The parents of the kids are reading a lot of negative things that deal with the football program, and now these kids can see for themselves. Everything is blown up in the media," Munson said.

Nobody ever visited Swazer when he was in grade school, but he said he was glad for the chance to help the kids.

Gingrich denies campaign misconduct

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Newt Gingrich angrily denied that a GOP political committee had illegally supported his 1990 election.

Democrats seized newly released documents to challenge the speaker's conduct.

Gingrich, R-Ga., used the word "phony" repeatedly to describe new allegations of campaign finance violations, filed in court by the Federal Election Commission.

He specifically rejected FEC-released documents from the organization, GOPAC, that indicated the group considered the Georgian's reelection its highest priority. The documents said GOPAC provided about $250,000 in 1990 for Newt support.

"No they did not. They explicitly did not," Gingrich said at a news conference.

Gingrich was general chairman of GOPAC in 1990, a time when the organization was not registered with the government to finance federal election campaigns.

GOPAC contends it only tried to influence state and local elections until its 1991 registration with the election commission. An FEC lawsuit is seeking disclosure of GOPAC's receipts, donors and expenditures and is asking for an unspecified fine.

The speaker's most persistent critic in the House, Democratic Whip David Bonior of Michigan, said he would file a new ethics complaint based on a personal, multi-million-dollar slush fund — a reference to the Gingrich support money. Bonior called the documents a smoking gun that shows Gingrich violated House standards of conduct. He said the chairman of the House ethics committee, Rep. Nancy Johnson, R-Conn., has conducted the biggest cover-up in the panel's history in a year-long investigation of Gingrich.

Johnson said the committee has been vigorous in its work behind closed doors, and added, "Taking a lot of time is not a negative."

One complaint under investigation alleges that a college course taught by Gingrich was not an educational activity, but a fund-raising arm of GOPAC. The committee has taken no action on any of the half-dozen complaints filed so far, although it is considering an outside counsel to investigate the course.

FEC-released memos and meeting transcripts from GOPAC indicated officials of the conservative group concluded Gingrich must be re-elected, and that candidate-training seminars were arranged in Georgia, in part, to protect Gingrich.

The Georgia lawmaker, then the second-ranking leader of the House Republican minority, was probably the most single-high priority we've got in dollars, one GOPAC document said.

JOBS WILL REMAIN PRIVATIZED DESPITE POOR SCALE CERTIFICATION

WICHITA (AP) — Private companies probably will continue to certify scales and fuel pumps in Kansas despite their poor track record, Kansas Agriculture Secretary Allie Devine said Tuesday.

The state cannot afford the millions of dollars it would cost government to do the work, Devine said.

"We anticipate keeping the service companies involved, but they will have to meet a higher standard than they do now," Devine said.

Inadequate oversight of the weights and measures testing program has led to inaccuracies in fuel pumps and scales for livestock and grocery stores according to a Kansas Department of Agriculture probe.

Investigators say preliminary results show about 17 percent of fuel pumps, 20 percent of livestock scales and 27 percent of grocery store checkout scales are inaccurate.

Agriculture investigators still are checking grain scales and grocery and department store scanners.

So far, there is no way to know whether the inaccuracies usually benefit consumers or retailers.

Devine's challenge is to solve the measurement problems caused in part by inadequate staff at a time when budget cuts and personnel reductions are the norm in state government.

THE BELLS WILL RING ONCE AGAIN IN THE 53-BELL CARILLON AT KU

LAWRENCE (AP) — After being silenced for renovations since 1993, the 53-bell carillon at the University of Kansas will ring again in time for graduation ceremonies next spring.

Extensive work on the bank of stationary bells, which are sounded by a keyboard, has included replacing the keys and playing mechanism, the school said Wednesday.

All the clappers are being replaced and mounted on new bearings. A large crane has been removing some bells for repositioning in the Memorial Campanile, or bell tower, at the center of campus.

"We're still casting new bells, but at this point, we are re-installing the old ones," Albert C. Gerken, who plays the carillon, said. "I can't tell you if that is going to be a temporary situation or a permanent one. We're still working on that part of the project."

The original 1951 clock mechanism will be replaced with an electronic device for better accuracy.

Gerken estimates the carillon renovation costs at $450,000. Most of that has come from donations.

A rededication ceremony is planned for April 26 and 27, he said.

STATE TO ARGUE FOR CHARGES

TOPEKA (AP) — Prosecutors will have one last chance Dec. 8 to convince the state Supreme Court to reinstate criminal charges against former Insurance Commissioner Fletcher Bell over his workers' compensation award.

The court has scheduled oral arguments for 9 a.m.

The attorney general's office and its two special prosecutors hope to overturn a Shawnee County judge's decision not to bind Bell over for trial.

Bell had faced two felony counts of theft by deception in connection with $94,469 in benefits awarded to him in February 1991, just six weeks after he retired from office.

Bell received the money for a January 1989 incident, in which he injured his back lifting a briefcase from the trunk of his car.

The two special prosecutors accused Bell of filing a false workers' compensation claim and improperly influencing how the state handled his claim.

Bell denied any wrongdoing. Bell, a Republican, served as insurance commissioner in 1971-1991.

FOILED ROBBERY ENDS IN DEATH

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — A 27-year-old man was shot to death in a gunfight with police after what officers said was a drug-store robbery.

Another suspected robber was caught, and a third suspect escaped in the incident Wednesday night, police said.

Police said an off-duty police officer working security at an Osco Drug Store called for backup when three men he thought looked suspicious entered the store shortly before the 9 p.m. closing time.

The three men were robbing the store when the other officers arrived.

One robber put down his handgun and ran out the front door, only to be tackled by officers a few hundred feet away in a cemetery.

The other two men exchanged gunfire with the officers.

One was struck in the shoulder and mouth and was pronounced dead upon arrival at a local hospital.

The other man escaped. The dead man was identified as Anthony D. Birch of Kansas City, Mo.

Student Senate allocated more than $223,000 from the Educational Opportunities Fund.

Only $223,390 was available for allocations from the account, and all the funds were allocated.

Five groups had amendments proposed to increase or add funds. Of six proposed amendments, three passed.

The first amendment decreased the amount allocated for the University-wide tutoring service from $56,000 to $55,100 and allocated $900 to the tutoring program in the College of Veterinary Medicine. The amendment passed by a vote of 26-16.

"The reason they have their own is because it would be impractical for them to go to the University-wide one, because no one else has to take those classes," Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said.

"If you take this out, you take money away from the vet med college, which is one of the premier institutions in this country," he said.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said the College of Veterinary Medicine did not spend any of the money Senate allocated to the college for tutoring last year.

"The dean's office usually pays for the tutoring," he said.

The second amendment increased the allocation to the Community Service Program from $2,000 to $5,000. Students go to South America, Jordan and India.

The amendment took $2,000 from both the University-wide tutorial service and the KSU Child Development Center childships, which are used to supplement money students have to pay for child care at the center. And the amendment took $1,000 from the allocation to the Department of Housing and Dining Services for a multicultural coordinator assistantship.

"This money we are asking for could make or break this program," Rebecca Miller, graduate senator, said.

The international program needs the allocation because the grant money used for the program in the past has expired.

On the second attempt, an amendment creating scholarships for under-represented students in the College of Arts and Sciences passed.

Six departments in the College of Arts and Sciences submitted requests for scholarships for under-represented students separately. The EOF Committee made an informal decision against making allocations on the department level. Arts and Sciences did not submit a college-wide request.

Aaron Otto, arts and sciences senator, said he proposed the first amendment because the departments had been able to receive money through separate requests in the past.

"Our committee did not fund department levels. Arts and Sciences did not get any money, because they did not submit a request from the college level," Finkeldei said.

Kyle Kessler, graduate senator, had a letter read by Otto in support of the amendment.

The allocations were clearly unfair because the decision not to fund at the department level was made after the requests had already been submitted, Kessler wrote.

The final amendment eliminated the multicultural appreciation and service learning for Housing and Dining and allocated $5,500 to the College of Arts and Sciences for scholarships.

Amendments were also proposed for the minority engineering program and the College of Business Administration. These amendments failed.

One of the main oppositions to amendments was decreasing childships for the Child Development Center.

Brenda Halinski, graduate student, said grant money was available for childships on the federal level as well as from private sources.

However, the center will not be getting money from Social and Rehabilitation Services for childships for students at four-year universities.

In other business, final action was taken on a resolution favoring the sale of 3.2-percent cereal malt beverages inside Bramlage Coliseum and the football stadium, as well as consumption in the parking lot before football games.

At press time, no action had been taken on the resolution or the amendment to the standing rules prohibiting roll-call votes late in the Senate meetings.

In first readings, a resolution commending the 1995 Livestock Judging team for winning the national championship at the National Intercollegiate Livestock Contest was read.

Two bills were also given first readings. The first bill would allocate $931.90 to the K-State Aikido Club for a seminar.

The second bill would reduce the allocation to the Agriculture Competition Teams from $15,000 to $13,771.75 and allocate $2,500 to Students for the Advancement of Management.

If the bill passes Jan. 25, the bill allocating $15,000 to the Agriculture Competition Teams passed earlier this semester will be repealed.

In other business, Halinski was re-approved as a student senator. Halinski resigned the week of Nov. 16.

Judge orders compliance with 'motor voter' bill by Kansas Legislature

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Some voters would have to register twice to participate fully in one election unless the 1996 Legislature takes action in response to a federal judge's order.

U.S. District Judge Kathryn Vratil of Kansas City, Kan., ordered the state on Thursday to comply with the 1993 federal "motor voter" law in administering federal elections. Vratil said she wants the changes to be in effect for the state's April 2 presidential preference primary.

The National Voter Registration Act affects only elections for federal offices — president, U.S. Senate and U.S. House — because Congress has no control over state elections. However, Congress passed the law in hopes of pressuring states to change their registration laws.

The law gets its nickname from its requirement that citizens be allowed to register to vote when they renew their driver's licenses.

Kansas would have such a system without the federal law, but the federal law requires registration at other government offices, mostly those with frequent contact with the public, such as welfare and employment agencies.

Vratil issued a preliminary injunction for the Kansas AFL-CIO and League of Women Voters of Kansas, who sued Gov. Bill Graves and Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh over the state's refusal to comply with the federal law.

Unless the Legislature acts, the state will have two separate registration systems, one for federal offices and one for all other state and local elections. A person who registers at a welfare office, for example, could vote in presidential and congressional races, but not legislative ones.

"Absolutely every action would be doubled for how we conduct elections," Thornburgh said. "There is a lot of potential to waste taxpayer dollars here."

The league and AFL-CIO alleged that the state's failure to change its laws so that it would comply with the national law violated the rights of their members.

In issuing her order, Vratil essentially gave the 1996 Legislature a chance to change state law. If it does not, she will allow the plaintiffs to pursue their case further.

Supporters of the federal law contend it will increase voter participation by increasing registration. States will improve voter turnout if they change their laws to mirror the federal statute, they say.

World AIDS Day offers chance for reflection

AIDS has been with us long enough that the ignorance surrounding it should be dispelled.

Today is a day of reflection. Today is a day of considering choices.

Ultimately, it is a day of accepting the realities of a life-threatening disease.

Today is World AIDS Day. Although AIDS is a topic most people wouldn't want to be reminded of, the body count continues to grow.

Every 23 minutes, someone in the United States dies from this disease, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

With the rampant spread of AIDS still going unchecked and a cure still unattainable, people still need to be responsible about the behavior they engage in.

The only sure-fire AIDS prevention method is abstinence, but if sex is on your mind, condoms should be also.

Although AIDS is becoming increasingly prevalent in our society, there is still an ignorant stigma attached to it.

Surprisingly, some people believe it couldn't happen to someone they know and that people with AIDS should be feared and ridiculed.

AIDS has been with us long enough that the ignorance surrounding it should be dispelled.

This is why World AIDS Day is so important — because the effects of AIDS are further reaching than people might realize and because by acting responsibly, people can do their part to prevent this disease from claiming more lives.

Consider this day an opportunity to decide how you will keep AIDS at bay and how you can help enlighten the world about the dangers and misconceptions of AIDS.

The everyone deserves that.

Technology threatens simple pleasures of life

I don't know how to drive.

No, I am not stupid or incapacitated or anything like that. The fact of the matter is I never learned. I never took Driver's Ed or sat behind the wheel with my Mom or Dad to get the basics.

I never even learned how to pump gas.

Most of the time when I tell people that, they look at me as if I had just spit on them. "Whaddya mean you don't know how to drive? Everyone knows how to drive," is a rather typical response.

You can only imagine what that look changes to when I tell them I also think personal computers are the largest and ugliest paperweights I have ever seen, and that is the only thing I would use the damned things for.

(One of my friends, who plugs into a computer almost as often as he brushes his teeth, had a hissy fit when I told him I thought motherboards made excellent doorstops. Even Kevyn Jacobs, the E-Collegian editor, shot me a dirty look.)

You may be getting the idea from my previous remarks that I hate technology. That is not true. I don't hate it — I'm just not fond of it, and I think I could live very comfortably without much of it.

Now, I am not talking about getting rid of all machinery. I am not talking about the "un-invention" of dialysis machines or pacemakers or the space program, either. So if you were about to vent your spleen about how much progress we have made with machinery, save your ire.

I am talking about being allowed to live without the whole shebang if I want to without criticism and without being made to feel as if I were either a throwback from ancient Greece or a complete idiot.

It may seem ungrateful in this day and age for someone younger than the age of 80 not to appreciate what recent technological advances have done to make life more convenient.

And I won't deny high-tech gadgetry hasn't helped save lives. Just because I do not like computers and cars and other such machinery, doesn't mean I don't understand their importance and their necessity.

What raises my hackles is the tendency that has grown out of their invention to label people who choose not to have e-mail or to surf the Internet as backwards or barbaric.

Yes, because there are a few of us in the world who choose not to have call waiting, caller identification, speed dialing, voice dialing, cellular phones or even a phone at all, is not ridiculous. We are quite comfortable living without a car or (gasp) a television.

So many in the world today are so proud of the great technological strides, but they may have forgotten the simple pleasure life offers without it.

Yes, typing on the keyboard is much faster, but it just doesn't beat the feeling of my old ink fountain pen gliding across the grain of a page.

And yes, driving a car can get me where I want to go, but the walk is much more pleasurable.

It's not just that I don't want to see these simple pleasures disappear. I don't want them to be considered worthy of being obsolete, and people who enjoy them have to put up with that kind of flack.

Occasionally, I will turn it off, unplug it, throw it out or not buy it at all. And I may even not bother to learn. Don't think I'm strange because I like the card catalog instead of the Lynx system.

I wouldn't unlearn everything we've learned over the past few decades. It's exciting to see the envelope of invention pushed. But I want it to be the envelope that's pushed — not me.

Bangladesh's problems obscure rich culture

Bangladesh, a land of miracles, is known for its chronic population problem.

With an area about the size of Wisconsin, Bangladesh is the ninth-most populated country in the world.

Its 115 million inhabitants are crammed into an 56,000-square mile area, which means the country has an average of more than 2,000 people per square mile.

This makes Bangladesh the most densely populated nation (excluding the city states) in the world.

Bangladesh adds about 3 million people to its population every year. Every five years, the country adds as many people as inhabit the entire continent of Australia.

Realizing the economic and social consequences of rapid population growth, the Bangladesh government adopted a population control program as early as the mid-1960s. This program has led to dramatic decline in birth rates in Bangladesh. The total birth rate, which was 6.3 births per woman in the early 1970s, declined to 3.4 for the period 1991-93, according to a 1993-94 Bangladesh Demographic and Health Survey (BDHS).

A number of factors have played a role in birth rate decline in Bangladesh. There has been a substantial rise in the age at marriage.

The mean age at first marriage for women increased from 16.6 years in 1974 to 18.2 years in 1991. At the time, it increased from 23.9 to 25.3 years for men.

In addition, the proportion of married women using contraception increased from 8 percent in 1975 to 45 percent in 1993-94.

In a country where the literacy rate is less than 30 percent, the above increase in the level of contraceptive use can be considered a significant achievement of the Bangladesh government.

Bangladesh is predominantly a rural country. About 80 percent of its population lives in rural areas.

Most people are farmers, relying on sustainable agriculture for their livelihood. About 90 percent of the arable land is used for growing rice, the staple of its population.

Despite its staggering population, traditional farming methods and frequent natural disasters and political upheavals, the country appears to be moving toward self-sufficiency in food production.

More surprising than the emerging situation of a surplus rice production is the export of high-quality, fine-grained rice to the Middle East, United States and other western markets.

Bangladesh is a country of rivers. Its flat deltaic plain is composed of sediments deposited by three mighty rivers — the Padma, Meghna and Janama along with their tributaries and distributaries.

The rivers serve as the main source of water for cultivation and as the principal arteries of transportation.

Rivers also provide fish, an important source of protein. Flooding of the rivers during the summer causes hardship, but fresh deposits of rich silt replenish the fertile soil. In fact, floods have become a way of life for rural Bangladeshis.

Bangladesh is noted for the remarkable ethnic and cultural homogeneity of its population.

Bangladeshis are particularly proud of their rich cultural and linguistic heritage.

They identify themselves closely with Bengali, their national language.

The language has a distinguished history in literature, music and poetry. At least two Bengali poets are well known in the West — Rabindranath Tagore, a Nobel laureate, and Kazi Nazrul Islam.

United by strong village traditions and the struggle for existence, most Bangladeshis express pride in their culture, which is predominantly based on folk traditions.

Students, faculty and staff of K-State, and residents of Manhattan and neighboring areas will be exposed to and will be able to enjoy folk culture of Bangladesh probably for the first time in their lives.

The Bangladesh Students Association (BSA) of K-State plans to celebrate Bangladesh Nite Dec. 2.

As a part of the celebration, there will be a seminar on folk music of Bangladesh. The seminar will be at 4 p.m. in the K-State Student Union. Dulal Bhowmik, writer and noted folk singer of Bangladesh, will be the guest speaker.

A Bangladeshi dinner will be served at Woodrow Wilson School at 5:30 p.m. Admission is $5 for adults, and children younger than 12 are free.

This will be followed by a live cultural program. In the first part of the program, local artists will sing and dance.

The main attraction of the night will be folk songs by a group from New York City. The members of the folk song group were regular artists of both Bangladesh radio and television.

I invite you to join with us to celebrate Bangladesh Nite.

► LADY TIGER CLASSIC

Women's team travels to Memphis

■ Coach Agler's 3-0
Wildcats play Grambling State in opening round of Lady Tiger Classic

Dan Lowrenz
sports editor

After a 3-0 start, the K-State women's basketball team travels to Memphis, Tenn., this weekend to play in the Lady Tiger Classic, hosted by the University of Memphis.

The Cats will open the tournament tonight against the Lady Tigers of Grambling State.

The Lady Tigers tied for the Southwestern Athletic Conference title last season and finished 21-7, including a trip to the NCAA tournament.

Wildcat coach Brian Agler said he expects Grambling to push the ball, looking for a more up-tempo game.

"They'll be aggressive offensively and try to extend their defense out on the floor," Agler said.

The Tigers return two starters from last year's squad, but neither averaged more than eight points per game.

"They're a team that is very good, and they have two starters back from last year. They had a very good year last year," Agler said.

Saturday, the Cats will face off with either Memphis (also the Tigers) or the Hornets of Alabama State in either the consolation or championship games.

Alabama State returns four starters from last year's 5-20 team.

Memphis brings back five starters from a team that finished 22-8 last year, including a trip to the NCAA tournament.

"They're a team similar to Grambling," Agler said. "Memphis has five starters back from an NCAA team, and they lost in the first round of the preseason National Invitational Tournament."

With both Grambling and Memphis being running teams, Agler said it was important for the Cats to control the pace of the game.

"We just need to try to control the tempo," Agler said.

Junior post Andria Jones is the Cats' leading scorer and rebounder coming into the tournament with 16.3 points and 6 boards per game.

Sophomore wing Brit Jacobson is averaging 14.7 points, and junior wing Missy Decker is currently at 9.3 points.

2-0 Wildcats to rematch Marshall

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Wildcat guard Anton Hubert guards Emporia State point guard Lamont Buntion during the Cats' 63-57 victory Wednesday night. Hubert had seven points.

► When K-State and Marshall meet Saturday afternoon it will be a rematch of a game last year which saw the Wildcats come from 15 points down in the second half to pull out a six-point victory on Marshall's home court.

Todd Stewart
assistant sports editor

Last year, a 7-1 K-State men's basketball team traveled to Huntington, W. Va., and needed a 41-20 surge during the final 12 minutes to escape with an 87-81 victory over Marshall.

The Wildcats get another shot against Marshall for this season at 1:10 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Coach Tom Asbury said the key for his team will not only be to focus on Marshall, but also to improve off of Wednesday's sluggish 63-57 win over Emporia State, before the team hits the road for games against Illinois and Washington.

"They'll be a decent team, but we'll have to play better than we did tonight," Asbury said after the Emporia State game.

In that six-point win against the Hornets, the Cats shot only 39 percent on the game, and that concerned Asbury the most.

"Bottom line is we cannot continue to shoot 39 percent," Asbury said. "That's where we were last year."

Forward Tyrone Davis was the savior for the Cats Wednesday, with 22 points on perfect 9-of-9 shooting from the field.

He also added 12 rebounds and three blocked shots to the Wildcat effort.

Davis said the Cats cannot be satisfied with just winning the game against Emporia State.

"It's a win, but nobody's happy. This is really a letdown to us," Davis said. "We need to play better than that."

Forward Mark Young said the problem wasn't execution but that the shots would not fall for the Cats.

"We didn't really come out ready to play," Young said.

"We got the shots we wanted. They just didn't go down."

Asbury said some of the problems can be attributed to the loss of senior point guard Elliot Hatcher to injury, which has forced players into roles they are not yet accustomed to.

"Without Elliot, we're still kind of just out there," Asbury said.

"We're asking some guys to do some things that they are not able to do consistently at this point in the season."

Fill-in point guards Aaron Swartzendruber and Aaron Hubert struggled against the Hornets.

The two made only four of a combined 16 shots, including only 2-of-11 from 3-point range.

But consistent play from his point guards and other players will come around in time, Asbury said.

"We're still a sluggish offensive team at times," Asbury said. "We're just not there yet."

► VOLLEYBALL

Wildcats start 1st postseason since 1979

Shana Newell
staff writer

► Coach Jim Moore's netters are in Kansas City, Mo., for the NIVC Tournament

K-State's volleyball team has a busy weekend scheduled as it travels to Kansas City, Mo., to participate in its first post-season tournament since the 1979 squad went to the AIAW Region VI tournament.

Although the 19-10 Wildcats were not invited to the NCAA tournament, the team's performances this season were impressive enough to convince the invitation committee of the NIVC tournament that K-State belonged in post-season play and in its annual tournament.

Those performances included an upset of the then-ranked No. 16 Colorado Buffaloes in September.

Since his arrival in Manhattan, Coach Jim Moore has brought a winning attitude to the program, and the ensuing record and a prospect of a post-season championship are reflections of that attitude.

In only his second season with the Wildcats, Moore has led the team to a 33-23 record. That is a .589 winning percentage.

The Cats begin tournament play at Municipal Auditorium at 9 a.m. against 21-10 Pepperdine University.

Drake University will be the opponent for K-State in its 2 p.m. match. The Cats continue at 9 a.m.

Friday when they face the Owls of Rice University for the second time this season. K-State defeated Rice earlier this season 3-1 at the Stephen F. Austin tournament.

The Cats close out regular tournament play at 2 p.m. Friday against Rhode Island.

The tournament is organized in a four-pool fashion, with each pool consisting of five teams.

Each team will play the other four teams in the pool.

The school with the best record in its pool advances to the final matches on Sunday.

Moore was unavailable for comment.

► OAKLAND LOOKING FOR REDEMPTION WITH WIN OVER 10-2 KC CHIEFS

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Oakland Raiders have little interest in history.

They don't care about the club's long rivalry with Kansas City, about the classic line battles between Oakland's Art Shell and the Chiefs' Buck Buchanan in the 1970s, or about losing 11 of their last 12 games in the series.

But they do have a keen sense of retribution, and they only need to think back to the third week of this season to get infuriated.

That's when the host Chiefs rallied to send the game into overtime, then won 23-17 on James Hasty's 64-yard interception return for a touchdown.

An official got in the way of receiver Tim Brown, colliding with him as Jeff Hostetler's pass flew directly to Jeff.

"The first meeting left me with a bitter taste," said Raiders defensive end Aundray Bruce.

"That was a game I felt like we should have won."

For the Chiefs, that win provided a boost for a team still trying to figure out how good it was after the retirement of Joe Montana.

"That gave us confidence we could get it done, no matter what the score, no matter how much time left," said Chiefs defensive tackle Dan Saleaumua. "We knew we could get it done because we did it against the Raiders in overtime."

Kansas City (10-2) can clinch the AFC West title with a win Sunday at Oakland. That would assure it of a playoff spot for the sixth straight year, the longest current streak in the NFL.

The Raiders (8-4), who have lost five straight to Kansas City, need a victory to solidify their playoff chances and to prove to themselves they can win a key game.

"We're a team that needs to win a close game. I think that's pretty obvious," said Raiders coach Mike White. "The difference in our teams right now is in the critical games. We're a team that has beaten ourselves and not found a way to win those games, and Kansas City is just the opposite."

The Chiefs are coming off a 24-12 Thanksgiving Day loss at Dallas.

The Raiders have lost two straight, at home against Dallas and on Monday night at San Diego.

The Chiefs offense is efficient and virtually mistake-free.

Steve Bono has thrown 18 touchdown passes and just seven interceptions. The offensive line has allowed just 17 sacks, and the Chiefs have turned the ball over an NFL-low 15 times.

Marcus Allen, who spent 11 years with the Raiders before signing with Kansas City in 1993, leads the Chiefs with 581 yards rushing and Greg Hill has 512 yards on the ground to add to the cause.

"I'm sure we'll want to keep trying to do what we've been doing — control the football on the ground," said

Chiefs defensive end Neil Smith, who has a team-high eight sacks for a unit that allows just 15.4 points per game.

Hostetler, who sat out the 12-6 loss at San Diego because of a bruised left shoulder, hopes to play Sunday.

He said the non-throwing shoulder, reinjured when he was slammed to the turf by Dallas' Chad Hennings on Nov. 19, was much improved as of Wednesday.

If Hostetler cannot play, he'll be replaced by 40-year-old Vince Evans, who threw three interceptions and lost a fumble against the San Diego Chargers.

Harvey Williams needs 73 yards to become the first Raider to run for 1,000 yards in a season since Allen did it 10 years ago, but now he's on the other side of the ball.

Tim Brown is 93 yards from becoming the first Raider with three consecutive 1,000-yard receiving seasons.

White said the Chiefs have a mental edge against the Raiders, based on their recent success in the series.

"In our division, they have been the standard bearer with a solid philosophy on defense and not beating themselves on offense," White said. "For whatever reason, that has been a solid formula against us."

additional tests with a positive result.

"It was confusing. I didn't know if I was positive or negative or which way to turn," she said. "When I got the negative results, I thought, 'Cool, I don't have it,' but I knew there was still a possibility."

"Then, I kept getting sick that semester, and it just didn't make sense."

Jones said it is unknown why she had two negative HIV test results.

"Either the virus seroconverts and becomes positive, then unconverts and can't be detected in testing, or it's an undetectable strand," Jones said.

Jones said the purpose of sharing her story was to bring awareness about HIV and AIDS, but she did not wish to say how it is believed she became infected with the virus.

"I'm purposely not going to say how I contracted the virus, because AIDS is a disease," she said. "It doesn't matter how you contract it."

"But I'm not an IV drug user and I'm certainly not a gay male — or so I don't think. Females are at risk and can contract the disease."

Jones said at times the question of how a person acquired the disease often distracts from other issues surrounding the disease.

"More infected people — whether gay or straight — are tired of the discrimination that goes along with the disease," she said. "No one asks someone with cancer how they got the disease because the fact is they have cancer, it doesn't matter."

Slowly, Jones said she began telling select individuals about her test results.

"The friends I have told have been more than supportive — none have rejected me in any way," she said. "But, with each person before I tell them, I weigh the pros and cons."

"I think, 'What's the best thing they could do? What's the worst?'"

But for Jones, telling her family has been more difficult.

"My family does not know," she said. "How do you tell your parents you're going to die?"

"When the day comes when it needs to be said, it will be one of the hardest days of my life, I'm sure."

At times, personal relationships with men have been difficult for Jones since finding out she was HIV positive, she said.

"The insurance companies get wind of the positive result when I finally get out on my own, either A — I will not get picked back up — or B — the premiums will be outlandish."

"Now, it's always an insecurity for me," she said. "I may not look diseased, but I feel diseased."

"When it comes to attractiveness and appeal, I feel like I lack it now — the insecurities are at both a physical and psychological level."

Since testing positive for HIV, Jones said she has had sex within a relationship with one person. Before engaging in intercourse, Jones said she and her partner discussed the possible consequences to make sure he was aware of the risks.

Jones said if she ever became involved with someone else, she would have the same conversations and take the same precautions.

"I still have sex," she said. "But it's very protected sex and very monogamous."

Jones said it is especially difficult for people with HIV to tell someone with whom they want to have a relationship with that they are HIV positive.

"You don't know," she said. "Are they going to turn around and walk away, or are they going to stick around?"

"It's like, 'I have something to tell you,' and you wait for a reaction."

Ironically, Jones was involved with the Manhattan AIDS Project even before she found out she was HIV positive.

"AIDS became my cause long before I knew I was infected," she said. "I just felt a tremendous urge to help."

Jones said she became involved with the Project because she is interested in helping people with AIDS too sick to take care of themselves. Also, she wanted to help fight discrimination about the disease.

Jones said since she found out she was HIV positive her reasons for being involved with the Project have not changed.

"The emphasis is not on me, but on the Manhattan community," she said.

The purpose of the Manhattan AIDS Project is to refer, advocate for or assist those living with HIV or AIDS.

The Project does activities such as sponsor support groups, give clients rides to the doctors' offices and other places and provide a buddy system into the home.

Recently, Jones said she opened up to several people involved with the Project about her HIV-positive results.

"When I told them it was dead silence," she said. "It's not something you expect to hear — certainly not from a 21-year-old."

Jones said after the initial shock, everyone was supportive.

"You wouldn't believe how many mothers and fathers I have in this community," she said.

But Jones said like telling anyone else, opening up to members of the Manhattan AIDS Project was still a risk.

"I just expect the worst and hope for the best — that I won't become dinner conversation later."

Jones said educating the public about AIDS can be frustrating.

"We can educate and educate, but until people change their behav-

"How do you tell your parents you're going to die? When the day comes when it needs to be said, it will be one of the hardest days of my life, I'm sure."

iors, the disease will not cease," she said.

Jones said it seems people only want to acknowledge AIDS if they have it, or if someone they know is infected.

Although Jones looks healthy, she said she has experienced side effects from the disease such as night sweats, fevers and fatigue.

In addition, Jones struggled with two bouts of bronchial pneumonia last year — one which lasted four months.

Jones said she is careful with her body, but there are still more things she could do.

"I won't say I'm in denial, but I'm not in the transition yet where I feel the need to adopt a completely healthy lifestyle," Jones said.

Although she said she was never a heavy drinker, she said she now only goes out drinking at most once or twice a month.

"I can partake in those activities, but it will affect my body more than someone with a normal immune system."

Jones said her T-cell count is about 500-550. A healthy person's T-cell count is about 1,500-2,000.

A person has AIDS when the T-cell count is below 200 and they have had two opportunistic infections such as pneumonia or a STD, she said.

"The T-cell count shows a physician where the disease has progressed to," she said. "The less the T-cell count, the less the ability of the body's immune system to fight."

In addition to going to school full time, Jones also has a job to help pay medical expenses, as well as living expenses. Each month, she said she pays from $200 to $500 — more than the price of her rent — for medical care at Lafene Health Center.

"All of my medical expenses come out-of-pocket," she said. "I have a fear of insurance companies. I've made sure all the tests I've had are confidential and not on a doctor's permanent records."

"If insurance companies get wind of a positive result when I finally get out on my own, either A — I will not get picked back up — or B — the premiums will be outlandish."

For now, Jones said she will continue to live day-by-day, and, along the way, help educate people about AIDS.

"Sometimes I don't blame people for discriminating because I know it's what they don't know," Jones said.

Park's actions has helped fight prejudice.

"I believe that because of the Civil Rights Movement not only blacks, but people in general are more pro-active instead of just hoping that the majority would one day realize they were equal," Scott said.

Wallace Gary, sophomore in secondary education and biology, said society has made progress, but it still has a long way to go.

The Civil Rights Movement did away with segregation laws, and today there is less discrimination in society, but problems still exist.

"It's not demonstrated publicly like it was back then," said Megan Bolinder, senior in English and secondary education.

Clyde Howard, director of unclassified affirmative action, said society offers better access to voting and opportunities to pursue different jobs in the work place.

Nyambe Harleston, senior in monetary policy and banking, said she rarely encounters racism on campus.

"To be honest, ever since I've been at K-State, I've only encountered racism once," Harleston said.

"I don't really know what's going on at this school. People are quiet," said Colette McLemore, junior in architectural engineering and public relations chair of the Black Student Union.

McLemore said BSU took an opinion pole about the campus' opinion affirmative action, but it did not have a large enough turnout.

McLemore also said more information about women and minorities needs to be included in classes.

"How can you have an English class with only white writers?" McLemore said.

Howard said minorities have also had important political positions, but their achievements are not always recognized in society.

"Historically, I don't believe that it has been acceptable in the broader community to point out their achievements," Howard said.

Howard said it is important for people of all different backgrounds to be able to work together in order to have success in the workplace.

"Accept people who are different. That's the key to success," Howard said.

silence as a time of remembrance.

About one in every 250 Americans is HIV positive and more than 441,528 AIDS cases have been reported in the United States as of Dec. 31, 1994, according to the American Association for World Health.

The theme for this year's World

AIDS Day is "Shared Rights, Shared Responsibilities."

Eiselein said the theme has great meaning.

"It means all of us have certain shared rights, such as health care without discrimination if we are sick with AIDS," Eiselein said.

Eiselein said shared responsibilities means people have responsibilities to protect themselves and others.

"The government, families and the community have the responsibility to make sure all members have adequate information and education to protect themselves and care for those who are sick."

World AIDS Day is coordinated by the World Health Organization Global Program on AIDS, the Pan American Health Organization, the American Association for World Health, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

He wasn't the only one. The stu-

"It was fun," Erin Armendariz said.

"I liked it."

Armendariz and her friend, Kelsi Hill, were paired up with Dominguez, who read them "My House." They said they both thought it was exciting.

The best part for the kids was after the athletes had read to them, because then the athletes gave autographs.

"The best part was the signing," Hill said.

Sydney Merrifield said her favorite part was showing Hubert around her classroom.

The athletes even signed a note to a student who was sick and wasn't in class.

This was the first year that the athletes had come to the elementary school to read in a few years, Cindy Garwick, first grade instructor, said. She said she was really happy with the idea of them coming.

"The kids love this kind of thing. It means a lot to them," Garwick said.

Speaker to discuss farming techniques

Dana Harding
staff reporter

Holistic resource management is just a part of Tom Frantzen's life. Frantzen, an Iowa farmer, will be at K-State Saturday as the keynote speaker for the Heartland Roundup. He will be talking about sound decisions for the family and farm.

His family started using holistic resource management to integrate family quality of life goals with managing a profitable farm.

"We make important decisions that impact our farm. It has made the place a lot safer and better and it has made life better in many ways," Jolene Frantzen, family member, said.

Frantzen said holistic resource management includes all family members in the decision-making process, such as setting goals, values and visions for the future of the farm.

He said this farming management process has been the greatest single change since switching to sustainable agriculture.

Family members said they believe their opinions make a difference.

"We meet together and talk about everything. My father asks for opinions, and he listens to what we have to say," Jessica Frantzen, family member, said.

Other family members said involving the family has made the farm a safer and better place to live.

Tom Frantzen said that in the long term, the family will have a clear distinctive voice to manage the farm because they leave the door open and let family members get involved.

In 1979, the Pope addressed conserving land and other resources for generations to come. Frantzen said after hearing the Pope's speech in Des Moines, he became serious about agriculture.

The first changes he made toward sustainable agriculture were economically driven, he said.

"We worked on reducing operating costs. We first looked at nitrogen and fertilizer levels in the soil and went from there," Frantzen said.

Today, the entire farm has been converted to sustainable agriculture, and changes are much more extensive than reducing operating costs.

To increase resource conservation, he uses narrow strip intercropping of feed grains, small grains and legumes. Each strip of crop consists of four rows.

Although strip intercropping increases the management level, he has had a terrific response to corn yields as well as an increase in other crop yields, Frantzen said.

During the summer months, sows are farrowed on these narrow crop strips to integrate animal and crop systems into a profitable whole.

Frantzen said his ultimate goal is to set an example and motivate others to preserve the land.

"To be truthful, I want to help motivate other people to make the world a better place to live. I want the farm to be an example of how farms can be sustainable and successful," Frantzen said.

Tom Frantzen has been president of the practical Farmers of Iowa, a nominee for the National Outstanding Young Farmer and twice recognized as one of the Outstanding Young Men of America.

WAR ON DRUGS

19 charged in Miami for smuggling cocaine

Associated Press

MIAMI — Nineteen people have been charged with importing and selling more than 7,700 pounds of Colombian cocaine, sometimes smuggling it into the United States in shipments of frozen fish.

Police put the street value of the cocaine at more than $61 million.

Twelve of those charged had been arrested as of Wednesday; the others remained at large. Most of those charged were believed to be members of the same family.

Prosecutors allege the ring used various methods to bring in the cocaine between February and November. Some of the drug was found hidden in frozen seafood sent through airports and the port of Miami.

Conference will focus on farming practices

Dana Harding
staff reporter

Alternative farming practices will be discussed at the second annual Heartland Roundup conference from 10:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Saturday at the K-State Student Union.

The one-day conference is sponsored by the Heartland Network, which includes 12 farmer and rancher groups across Kansas.

Twelve concurrent elective workshops will be given featuring farming practices tried within the Heartland Network.

Workshops will focus on management intensive grazing, farming for improved soil quality, inspection and labeling requirements for direct-marketed meat, range-fed chickens as a new market niche and an overview of the Heartland Network.

Jerry Jost, project coordinator for the Heartland Network, said the group wanted to look at how agriculture can be reconnected with the consumer.

The Heartland Network was founded in 1979 on the principle of keeping economic opportunities open for farmers.

Jost said water quality issues first brought the group together, but maintaining economic opportunities for small town farmers was the founding principle.

Child-care activities will be offered during the conference. All the educational events are free and open to the public, but meal reservations are $8.

For reservations or additional information, Jost may be contacted at the Heartland Network (913) 841-7044.

BOOK BANNING

Judge rules book should return to high school library shelves

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A critically acclaimed book about two teen-age girls who fall in love with each other cannot be banned from high school library shelves in the Olathe School District, a federal judge ruled.

Judge G. Thomas Van Bebber on Wednesday said school board members violated the First Amendment when they removed the book "Annie on My Mind" in January 1994 because they disagreed with the book's content.

"Although local school boards have broad discretion in the management of school affairs," Van Bebber wrote in his order, "they must act within fundamental constitutional limits."

The American Civil Liberties Union of Kansas and Western Missouri represented the five students and their parents who challenged the school board's decision.

"The court's decision is a necessary reminder that there is no room for small-minded bigotry in our public schools," Marjorie Heins, an ACLU lawyer in the case, said.

Olathe School Superintendent Ron Wimmer said the district has not decided whether to appeal the decision.

During the trial in late September and early October, school board members testified they believed their opinions about "Annie" and homosexuality were representative of people in the district. They said they believed they had a mandate to ban the book.

School board president Robert Drummond testified that homosexuality is a mental disorder that leads to a destructive life.

"I believe what the Bible says about homosexuality," Drummond said. "And the Bible says homosexuality is a sin." Nancy Garden, who wrote "Annie" in the 1970s, testified in the trial that she meant the book to show children that being gay does not doom them to a sad and miserable life.

In late 1993, a gay advocacy group called Project 21 donated copies of "Annie on My Mind" and another gay-themed novel to area schools. Olathe South High School received a copy, although the book had been on library shelves for a decade.

ALUMNI DATABASE

KSU Alumni Association using expanded software

Jeremy Crabtree
staff reporter

The KSU Alumni Association has new computer software site licenses to operate an alumni database on its own file server.

Jeanine Lake, database coordinator for the Alumni Association, said the move to its own server will only help.

"Not a whole lot has changed with the system," Lake said. "However, now we will have more room to expand. We took a lot of room up on the mainframe, and now we can just continue to grow without any worries."

The database is where the Alumni Association stores alumni information for official University purposes, such as mailing the K-Stater, college alumni newsletters and numerous departmental newsletters.

Before the new server, which has been up and running since early November, the data base was stored on the University's mainframe computer. It was operated by the Office of Information Systems.

Administrative access to alumni information through KSUVM ended on Oct. 14 when the database was removed from the mainframe. The Alumni Association's server was working by early November.

Training sessions have begun for the administrators using the database the most, Lake said.

"The training actually only takes about 45 minutes," Lake said. "We are loading the software on a computer and taking it over to the Foundation Center for the training."

Lake said the training sessions will help people learn how to operate the software and read the alumni data computer screen.

"We are training the people that will work with it the most first. For example, we are training people in the dean's offices and administration first, because they use the database all the time," Lake said.

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Columnist criticized for using ethnic slur

Associated Press

CHICAGO — It's 40 lashes with a wet noodle for Ann Landers for referring to the pope as a Polack.

"I should not have used a slang term for Polish," the advice columnist said in a statement Thursday. "It was poor judgment, and I apologize."

Landers drew howls of protest from Polish-Americans after the New Yorker this week published a profile of her in which she was asked for her impressions of Pope John Paul II, whom she has met.

"Looks like an angel. He has the face of an angel," she said.

"His eyes are sky blue, and his cheeks are pink and adorable-looking, and he has a sweet sense of humor. Of course, he's a Polack," she laughingly told the interviewer. "They're very anti-woman."

Edward G. Dykka, president of the Polish Roman Catholic Union of America, a fraternal organization of about 100,000 members, said he was stunned.

"Ethnic groups throughout this country have fought to get rid of these slurs against all of us, and then Ann Landers throws one out," he said. "I think people will take this as an insult, as they have, and stop reading her."

Edward Moskal, president of the Polish American Congress, which represents about 1 million people, had his own advice for Landers. "She should have shut up after she made the nice remark about the pope," he said.

In apologizing, she used one of her trademark phrases. "It's time to get out the wet noodle and give myself 40 lashes," she said.

The article, by Christopher Buckley, describes Landers' Jewish upbringing in Sioux City, Iowa, and her rise to become the columnist a World Almanac poll once found to be the most influential woman in the United States.

Landers' real name is Eppie Lederer. Her Chicago-based column is published in about 1,200 newspapers. Her twin sister, Pauline "Popo" Phillips, writes the "Dear Abby" column.

In the article, Landers commented about a number of other famous people, including President Kennedy, whom she described as "the womanizer from hell. I mean, this guy had women all over the place. In the swimming pool, the locker room. Of course, he had a bum back, for one thing, and the women had to do all the work."

About President Clinton, she said, "I don't think he's fooling around anymore. Nor do I think he will. I read that Hillary threw a lamp at him. You know something? I think she did."

During her 40 years as a columnist, Landers has weathered other storms. In 1982, several newspapers temporarily stopped running her column when it was revealed that Landers had recycled 15-year-old material. Landers promised to discontinue the practice.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Clinton praises cease-fire

President calls for continuation of peace

Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — President Clinton visited violence-scarred neighborhoods on both sides of Northern Ireland's long conflict Thursday, celebrating a successful 15-month cease-fire and declaring, "Surely there can be no turning back."

The first American president ever to come to the troubled province, Clinton implored Roman Catholics and Protestants alike not to surrender to the impulses of old habits and hard grudges.

There was a poignant reminder of the horror of the past and the promise of the future when Catherine Hamill, a 9-year-old Catholic schoolgirl, shyly read a letter to the president:

"My first daddy died in the troubles. It was the saddest day of my life. I still think of him. Now it is nice and peaceful." Her father was slain by gunmen who burst into his home and shot him in front of his family in 1987.

In his main speech of the day, Clinton addressed several thousand people at Mackie Metal Plant, located along a peace line, a wall of steel and stone dividing Catholic and Protestant neighborhoods.

The plant's workforce is mixed but mostly Protestant. Everyone is instructed to leave their politics at the door.

"You must stand firm against terror," Clinton said. "You must say to those who still would use violence for political objectives: 'You are the past. Your day is over.'"

Clinton's peace appeals were loudly applauded, though a lone heckler, Cedric Wilson, twice called out, "Never." Wilson is aligned with Protestant firebrand Ian Paisley, leader of the most extreme pro-British party, the Democratic Unionist Party.

Despite the truce observed by paramilitary groups, security was intense.

Nearly 3,000 officers were put on duty to protect Clinton during his 24-hour stay. Dozens of roads were closed, sewers were searched and sealed, and metal detectors were erected in Clinton's Belfast hotel, bombed 37 times since the troubles began in 1969.

A crowd estimated at more than 50,000 braved the evening chill to watch Clinton switch on the Christmas lights outside Belfast city hall.

Steeped in symbolism, Clinton's visit was designed to build momentum in the peace process and a sense of accomplishment in the cease-fire.

The journey — with a stop Friday in Dublin — also had political reverberations for Clinton, because 44 million Americans claim some Irish ancestry.

The visit required a diplomatic balancing act.

Arriving here on the heels of a breakthrough agreement between London and Dublin on Northern Ireland, Clinton stopped first in a hard-line Protestant neighborhood, where he bought apples and flowers for his wife, Hillary.

Later, the president visited a Catholic neighborhood, dropping by a bakery for a handshake with Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams, the political voice of the outlawed IRA. "A thousand welcomes," Adams said in a Gaelic greeting.

The brief one-on-one encounter was a step up for Adams from a group meeting with the president last March on St. Patrick's Day. Clinton's attention is a reward for the IRA's September 1, 1994, halt to a 24-year violent campaign to end British rule in Northern Ireland. Pro-British Protestant gunmen announced a matching cease-fire the following month.

An evening reception provided an opportunity for Clinton to pull aside several prominent political leaders for quick meetings. Invited guests included Adams and Paisley, as well as David Trimble, leader of the Ulster Unionists, Northern Ireland's biggest Protestant party.

Clinton divided his day between Belfast and Londonderry, considered a vanguard of communities trying to put the troubles in the past.

Thousands of people overflowed the town square in Londonderry to see the president and first lady.

"This is one of the greatest things to happen to 'Derry,' oil worker John Cassidy, a Catholic nationalist, said. "It's a hell of a shot in the arm to be recognized."

In both Londonderry and Belfast, Clinton reminded audiences of the dramatic changes in everyday life under the cease-fire.

"Soldiers have left the streets of Belfast; many have gone home. People can go to the pub or the store without the burden of the search or the threat of a bomb."

Clinton urged all parties to be forgiving.

"You, the vast majority, Protestant and Catholic alike, must not allow the ship of peace to sink on the rocks of old habits and hard grudges," he said.

In a message to both sides, he said, "Engaging in honest dialogue is not an act of surrender. It is an act of strength and common sense."

CRIME

Nebraska considers boot camp for young offenders

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Nebraska lawmakers will be asked for a fourth time to consider building a boot camp for young, nonviolent criminals when the Legislature convenes in January, Gov. Ben Nelson said Tuesday.

The boot camp was one of two crime-fighting ideas Nelson outlined at a conference on gang awareness. The other proposal would define the killing of a working police officer as an aggravating circumstance that could merit the death penalty.

Other details of the Gang Violence Act of 1996 — including details of combating gang violence — will be released later, Nelson said.

The boot camp proposal has been included in at least three anti-crime bills, but it was rejected by lawmakers wary of its price tag or proposed programs. Nelson said the camp would provide education, treatment for drug-related problems and other care for up to 180 days.

He said he did not have a preference for a camp site.

"It's a cost-effective alternative to putting first-time youthful offenders behind bars with serious criminals," Nelson said. "It will save prison beds for those who deserve them."

Sen. John Lindsay of Omaha, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said lawmakers have been concerned about programs and state dollars in past boot-camp proposals.

"If programs are taken out, it's cheaper, but may not be as effective," Lindsay said.

Nelson said the boot camp idea might face similar opposition once the Legislature convenes in 1996, but he predicted the death penalty proposal would have wide support.

The proposal follows the Aug. 20 shooting death of Omaha Police Officer Jimmy Wilson Jr. during a traffic stop. Two men are charged with murder in the case and five others, including two young teenagers, are charged as accessories to murder.

Wilson was the first Omaha police officer killed in the line of duty in 21 years. Lindsay said changes to death-penalty laws often are divisive.

"But I suspect this will be carefully crafted by the governor," Lindsay said. "If it can get debated on the floor, I think it would pass. But it's a short session (60 days)."

Nelson was reluctant to call the boot camp a solution.

"We've got more people in prison today than ever before, for longer periods of time than ever before, and we've built more prisons than ever before," he said. "And yet problems continue to multiply."

Last year, there were 6,264 violent crimes — murders, rapes, robberies and aggravated assaults — reported in Nebraska, according to the state Commission on Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice.

That is a 3-percent increase since 1993, but there was a 14-percent jump in juvenile arrests for violent crimes.

"We've had people telling us that all we have to do to solve this problem is to stiffen the penalties, put them away for a longer period of time," Nelson said.

"We're doing that, and yet for every one we take off the street there are two others who take their place. We're trying to find a mix of prevention, intervention and attention."

Nelson successfully pushed two anti-crime bills in the last two years. This year's Safe Streets Act set new mandatory minimum sentences for repeat violent offenders and for drug and firearms violations.

Earlier Nelson-backed legislation set up the Office of Juvenile Services, including programs aimed at reducing youth crime. The plan calls for an $8.9 million, 75-bed youth prison in Douglas County.

Doug Hanson, construction manager for the Department of Correctional Services, said a decision among the four sites in the county is expected by the end of the week.

Nelson, a Democrat who is running for the U.S. Senate in 1996, said he would work as much as possible on crafting anti-crime legislation with Attorney General Don Stenberg, who is seeking the Republican Senate nod.

Stenberg outlined anti-crime legislation earlier this fall similar to what Nelson has proposed.

'Cinderella' to feature local talent in show

Portia Sisco
staff writer

A children's fairy tale will be brought to life Saturday when McCain Auditorium presents the Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein musical, "Cinderella."

Nineteen local children will participate in the production, Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said. Rodgers and Hammerstein's "Cinderella" aired first on March 31, 1957.

Julie Andrews played Cinderella in a live broadcast production that was viewed by more than 107 million people.

Martin praised Rodgers and Hammerstein as two of the most creative people writing musicals.

"The actors are experienced, but this is not a show that will feature national names," Martin said.

The actors performing in "Cinderella" auditioned and were chosen for each part.

Musicals are not often done by repertory companies, but produced typically for a run, Martin said.

The classic musical score will feature songs such as "Impossible" and "Ten Minutes Ago," a romantic duet between Cinderella and the Prince.

Several of the dancers have attended the Joffrey School of Ballet and the Connecticut Ballet Theater.

Oklahoma was the first Rodgers and Hammerstein collaboration.

The company has also performed many famous musicals, ranging from "South Pacific" to "The King and I."

The company has earned two Pulitzer Prizes, 14 Academy Awards, two Grammy Awards and 26 Tony Awards.

'Wild Bill' acting is 1st-rate

Associated Press

The modern director who takes on a Western film faces a major problem: Audiences know many of the ingredients by heart.

It's hard to figure out exactly what writer-director Walter Hill ("48 Hours," "The Warriors," "Geronimo") was up to in "Wild Bill," a semfictionalized account of the exploits of Western legend Wild Bill Hickok.

Hill's movie is a reflective look at a man of action entering the twilight of his days who is unable to escape either his reputation or his past exploits.

There's a crack cast: Jeff Bridges as Wild Bill, Ellen Barkin as his sometime girlfriend, Calamity Jane, and fine performances from John Hurt, Diane Lane and Bruce Dern.

But it appears the director never really figured out what he's doing with them — or with the highly talented cinematographers he assembled to create the rich scenes of the old West.

Though popping with great ingredients, the movie seems aimless, uncommitted and uninspired.

The plot involves one Jack McCall — maddeningly overplayed by David Arquette — a wild-eyed teen-ager who has come to town to kill Bill to avenge his mother, who he believes Bill seduced and betrayed.

We already know that Bill's going to meet his maker by the movie's end — the opening credits feature his funeral. So the only suspense revolves around the question of when his giggling neophyte sidekick will get up the nerve to make his move and whether he'll be the one who finally downs ole Bill.

In short, everybody does their best in the service of a screenplay that is just not fully gelled.

► HABITAT FOR HUMANITY

Concert to help raise money

■ Acclaimed musicians to perform Saturday night

contributing writer

In a benefit concert for Habitat for Humanity Saturday night, Bird House Productions and the Manhattan Arts Center will present the acoustic endeavors of acclaimed singer-songwriters, Tom Prasada-Rao and Tom Kimmel.

The performances will begin at 8 p.m. at the Manhattan Arts Center, and tickets are $8 at the door.

Prasada-Rao has made a name for himself with the release of "Incoming" in 1992, which sold more than 12,000 copies and with his latest recording, "The Way of the World," produced independently through Ahimsa Acoustics.

In 1994, Prasada-Rao contributed to a live compilation, "Follow that Road," the first volume of "Editor's Choice: Top 12 DIYs."

His most recent compilation, "The Silverwood Project," is a benefit for the National Coalition for the Homeless.

He has received a number of awards including both first and second place in the folk category at the Mid-Atlantic Song Contest, as well as second place in the jazz category.

Featured in Billboard and the Performing Songwriter, he was also a Kerrville New Folk winner and a Washington Area Musicians Association's "Wammie" winner for Male Vocalist Folk-Contemporary and Folk Traditional in 1993 and 1994.

Frequenting a vast variety of folk and acoustic music festivals, the prolific songwriter was involved in the Rocky Mountain Folk Festival, Kerrville and the Philadelphia Folk Festival.

Prasada-Rao has collaborated with an array of performing artists throughout his extensive experience in workshops and festivals including John Gorka and Ani DiFranco, David Wilcox and Patty Larkin, and Harvey Reid and Janis Ian.

Opening for Prasada-Rao, Kimmel is another Kerrville Folk Festival winner in the category of New Folk Concerts in 1993.

Kimmel has released two albums, "5 to 1" in 1987 and "Circle Back Home" in 1990, both on PolyGram Records. His last release, "Don't Look Back," was a compilation on his own label, Point Clear, in 1993.

His European and U.S. tours have given him the opportunity to open for Heart and Nanci Griffith, and his songs have been featured in several motion pictures. Among these films are "Twins," "Navy Seals" and "She-Devil."

Both the musicians take risks in integrating various styles of music. Kimmel's approach has a more romantic tradition, while Prasada-Rao's songs carry more political mischief and challenge the spiritual, social and economic state of the nation.

Marine safe after falling overboard

Associated Press

KARACHI, Pakistan — Lance Cpl. Zachary Mayo counted on having a few high seas adventures on board the aircraft carrier USS America, but falling overboard into the Arabian Sea wasn't quite what he had in mind.

"I never expected I would be off the ship," the exhausted, but safe, 20-year-old Marine told reporters.

Mayo's adventure began early Saturday morning when, unable to sleep, he went on deck for a breath of fresh air. A shifting wind and a swinging metal door knocked him overboard, his cries unheard on the empty deck above.

The Navy gave him up for lost after a lengthy search, and Mayo bobbed helplessly for 36 hours in the middle of the ocean until Pakistani fishermen picked him up and took him to their village.

U.S. consulate officials brought him to Karachi on Thursday. On Friday, Mayo is to fly to Bahrain for a check-up with U.S. military doctors. If deemed fit, he'll return to his ship, still in the Arabian Sea en route to the Persian Gulf. Mayo briefly described how he contemplated his fate as he floated and swam, alone at sea. Putting his Marine training to use, he tied his pants in a knot and inflated them as a life preserver.

"What came to mind were all the things I've never done before," he said. "I thought that I would never be able to say goodbye to my parents and to my friends."

On arrival in Karachi, Mayo had a hot meal and spoke at length to his parents in Osburn, Idaho. He first talked to his parents from the remote fishing village of Gwadar, Pakistan, where his rescuers brought him.

Mayo's parents, churning over the news that their son was missing, awakened in the wee hours Wednesday to a phone call from a man with a Pakistani accent asking if they wanted to speak to him.

"He just said, 'Hi Dad,'" his father, Stanley Mayo, said.

"We were going through everything that a parent goes through when a child is in trouble," his father said.

E-mail revenge crashes school's message system

Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. — The FBI has accused a Monmouth University junior of committing computer-assisted revenge by sending 24,000 electronic messages to two administrators and crashing the school's message system.

It took about five hours to fix the e-mail system at the West Long Branch school on Nov. 20, said Grey Dimenna, university general counsel. Other school computer systems were not affected.

The messages, consisting of random text, were sent automatically by an "e-mail bomb" program, Dimenna said.

Dominick S. LaScala appeared in court Tuesday on federal charges of using a computer used in interstate commerce to send data he knew would damage a system, a felony; and using a computer with reckless disregard, a misdemeanor.

"We think we will be vindicated at trial," LaScala's lawyer, Frank E. Tournour, said.

Systems operators and FBI agents traced the messages in less than two days to LaScala, 21, of Bethpage, N.Y., FBI Special Agent John Mahoney said.

The messages were traced through various Internet accounts in two states to an account maintained by another Monmouth student, Mahoney said.

LaScala's own university computer privileges had been suspended for ignoring requests to stop posting commercial messages on inappropriate parts of the Internet, Dimenna said.

He was soliciting investors in a restaurant, FBI Special Agent Monica Baldwin said.

School administrators haven't decided whether LaScala will face university discipline, which could include expulsion, Dimenna said.

If convicted on both federal counts, he could face a maximum of six years in prison and a $350,000 fine; actual penalties would be far less under federal sentencing guidelines.

Rec Report

Kansas State University, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex

December 1995

Watch for our full page ad on Monday, January 22 for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

Working It Out

Exercise the Spirit of the Season at the annual Jingle Bell Workout, Friday, December 8. All exercise sessions will be combined that day at 5:30 p.m. Holiday music and jinglebells for everyone's shoes will be part of the exercise festivities. December 8 is also the last day of Wildcat Workout exercise sessions for the fall semester. Exercise sessions will resume Monday, January 22, with a NEW spring semester schedule. Call Rec Check at 532-6000 for days and times exercise sessions are offered.

Pool Action

Wednesday, December 6, is the last Stroke Mechanics Workshop of the semester. If you are interested, sign up at the Natatorium. Friday, December 8, is the last day for fall semester Wildcat Waterworks aquatic exercise sessions. Sessions will resume Monday, January 22. Call Rec Check at 532-6000 for days and times exercise sessions are offered.

INTRAMURAL MANIA

DECEMBER INTRAMURAL DATES TO REMEMBER

Day	Event	Time	Location
3	3-Point Shootout	1p.m.-5 p.m.	Recreational Complex, Main West Gym
12	Team Points Posted	8 a.m.	Recreation Complex

INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL

Don't miss our largest intramural sport of the year! Start organizing your teams NOW for the upcoming basketball season. Entries will be accepted Monday, January 22, through Friday, January 26. Priority on playing times is on a first-come, first-serve basis. Information sheets with league menus will be available Monday, December 11, in the Recreational Services office.

And There's the stretch

The Recreation Complex has added two new stretching tables, stretch straps, Resist-A-Ball orthopedic balls, ProStretch, and Multi-Flex stretch bars. With the padded stretching tables, stretching is made easier by not having to go all the way down to the floor to perform the activity. The stretch straps work with the major muscles, aids in partner resistance stretching without having to use a partner, and allows an increase in the participants range of motion. The orthopedic balls are a tough, versatile ball that's great for trunk stability, abdominal work and perfect for back rehabilitation. Although not new, the ProStretch lower leg rocking apparatus is used to loosen, increase flexibility, improve range of motion, and strengthen vital muscular areas in the lower leg. The stretch bar is an excellent piece for stretching the arms, shoulder joint/girdle, and trunk. Stretching in conjunction with exercise reduces the risk of injury and increases flexibility.

Who's Who at Recreational Services

Kevin Sides, senior in ag business from Almena, Kansas, has been employed as an Intramural Supervisor for a year and a half. His involvement with the intramural program has aided him in obtaining leadership qualities and has also been instrumental in instilling confidence to deal with people in various situations. "I have enjoyed being associated with all aspects of intramural sports, as well as the people who are involved with them," he said. Kevin will not only miss his involvement with the program but also competing in various intramural sports. Following graduation in December, Kevin plans to return home to Almena to take part in operating the family farm.

Dani Stewart, senior in elementary education has been working as a Building Supervisor for two years. Stewart, native of Omaha, Nebraska, said she enjoys the people she works with the most. "I will miss the people the most when I leave, they're the best," she said. Through her experience in working at the Recreation Complex, she has learned how to deal with people and resolve conflicts. Aside from her duties at the Recreation Complex, Dani enjoys reading, running, swimming and shopping. Following graduation in May, she will begin her career as a teacher.

Brian Griffith is a senior majoring in hotel/restaurant management with a minor in business. Brian has been working as a Building Supervisor for three years. "I work at the Rec because the students are fun to work around," he said. "People come here to exercise because they want to, so most of them are having fun, which makes my job enjoyable." Brian's most memorable experiences have been related to dealing with the construction inconveniences. Griffith, native of Hutchinson, Kansas, said he will miss having the facility to work out in after he graduates. Brian enjoys most outdoor sports, especially snow skiing.

Holiday Blues?

Too much alcohol and sugar, and too little exercise and sleep, account for a good proportion of holiday depression. HealthQuest, 1995.

Candlelight vigil honors victims

■ World AIDS Day creates awareness of disease

J. Scott
staff writer

"We have gathered here today to stand in solidarity with all people who have HIV/AIDS, all who have died from this disease and all their caregivers."

This was the opening of the many prayers read Friday evening at a candlelight memorial in downtown Manhattan.

About 90 people gathered on the north side of Manhattan Town Center in remembrance of World AIDS Day, including Mayor Edith Stunkel and Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan.

"Remembrance is the key — to remember those people who have died of AIDS and to remember those in our community with AIDS," Greg Eiselein, assistant professor of English, said.

On a personal level, World AIDS Day means dealing with grief of losing someone, he said.

"Within the community, many may not be affected by this, then it becomes political," he said.

Having an event like this in Manhattan brings awareness to the public that HIV/AIDS are here in Manhattan and here in Kansas, not just in big cities or in Africa, Eiselein said.

Songs were sung, prayers were read, and personal experiences with the disease were expressed.

Bev and Keith Bodine of Topeka have had their family affected by AIDS twice. The disease has claimed one of their sons and Keith's brother.

The Bodines spoke about the loss of their eldest son, Mike, who died on Aug. 21, 1992.

"We loved our son, and we never turned our back on our son," Keith Bodine said.

The message he said he wanted to give was to not turn your back on AIDS patients.

"People must remember just because someone is HIV-positive or has AIDS that they are an individual, and they need your love and support," he said.

Bev Bodine said World AIDS Day brought back the memory of her son.

"By having a day set aside, this is a good way to get the word out about AIDS," she said.

The Bodines are active with the AIDS-awareness movement.

"We volunteer with the Topeka AIDS Project, and we speak at high schools and universities," she said.

Whenever they can make people aware, they do, Bev Bodine said.

Hochhauser spoke to the crowd about what Kathleen White, chair and member of the State Board of Education, was trying to do to increase AIDS education and awareness.

"We need to provide a forum where no child will be discriminated against when they come to grips with their sexual identity," she said.

Hochhauser informed the people that in Manhattan the funds for AIDS Medicine have run out.

"This fund helps families with the costs of living with AIDS," she said.

Hochhauser also urged the people of Manhattan to make donations and to support the Riley County Health Department.

Senate asks for beer sales

Cristina Janney

city and government editor

Student Senate voted 29-22 Thursday night to approve a resolution that supports the sale and consumption of beer in KSU Stadium.

The resolution said state statute allows alcohol to be consumed in some University facilities that are used for non-academic purposes, but University policy prevents beer from being consumed in the stadium.

Drew Wallace, business senator and co-author of the resolution, said the resolution was an attempt to get the administration to look at the possibility of beer sales and consumption at KSU Stadium and Bramlage Coliseum.

Wallace said the beer sales could be a source of revenue for the University.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said his office usually dealt with 10 to 20 alcohol-related incidents every football season.

Since the crackdown on alcohol at football games began, he has only had to deal with one incident, he said.

Jim Muller, associate director of intercollegiate athletics and Bramlage Coliseum, said there had been a significant drop in alcohol-related incidents

► OBITUARY

Professor honored 2 days before death

Kimberly Hefling

staff reporter

Funeral services were conducted Saturday at Saint Thomas More Catholic Church for Wayne Norvell, head of the department of marketing.

The burial services will take place today in Arkansas.

Norvell died of cancer Wednesday evening at the Saint Mary Hospital. He was 54.

Since coming to K-State as an assistant professor in 1974, Norvell had about 10,000 students take his classes, said Yar M. Ebadi, interim dean of the College of Business Administration.

In addition, Norvell received three outstanding teaching awards from the University, including the Kansas State Bank Outstanding Teaching Award in the College of Business, two days before his death.

Unfortunately, Ebadi said, Norvell was unaware he had received this honor.

Ebadi said Norvell was a well-liked and motivating professor.

"He was an excellent researcher and had more than 50 articles and several books," Ebadi said. "As department head, one of his strengths was his ability to motivate."

Dancers use props to tell dance history

Portia Sisco

staff writer

Paper cups, lighted candles and a Slinky were just a few of the props used in WinterDance '95.

Featuring folk songs, experimental comedy and classical ballet, WinterDance was a cultural and historical look at dance.

The presentation began with a folk dance set to traditional Romanian music. Three couples trade partners in a series of claps and hops, exchanging coy looks.

They were the epitome of youth and innocence. A solemn interlude was interrupted when the three female dancers reemerged, holding lighted candles.

In "Anomaly," choreographed by Joyce Yagerline, dancers dressed in tie-dye, saluted the sky and swayed to a drumbeat.

"My Cup Runneth Over" was an experimental dance with no music. Jenny Mavrovich, senior in theater, was the choreographer and the only performer.

The oddity of the dance was exhibited in its props, including a squeaking stuffed animal, a gerbil ball and some paper cups.

Mavrovich created a dance that was a combination of acting and athletic ability. Her creativity and flexibility were highlighted in this humorous dance.

Melanie Furjanic and Steve Hoekstra were transformed into music box dolls in a classical ballet

Holiday Bowl travel packages

K-State fans have a choice between the Alumni Association's two travel packages to get to the Plymouth Holiday Bowl Dec. 29 in San Diego.

Air-travel package

Costs $830 based on double occupancy. It includes round-trip airfare, three nights hotel arrangements, ground transfers, a game ticket and a ticket to the Alumni Association's pregame party.

Deadline for making reservations for the air-travel package is Friday.

Land package

Costs $390, including hotel arrangements for three nights, ground transfers, a game ticket and a ticket to the Alumni Association's pre-game party.

More than 2,700 K-State fans have made arrangements through the Alumni Association. Packages sold include the following:

- 1,000 air-travel packages
- 225 ground-only packages
- 1,500 pre-game packages

Call the bowl hotline at 1-800-898-2695 for more information on the Alumni Association's travel packages. Manhattan residents are encouraged to call the Alumni Association's office line at 532-6260.

Cat fans prepare for bowl

Jeremy Crabtree

staff reporter

K-State fans are making plans for the westward trek to the Plymouth Holiday Bowl Dec. 29 in San Diego.

Becky Klingler, director of constituent programs for the KSU Alumni Association, said that at last check, more than 2,700 K-State fans had made arrangements to get to the bowl game through the Alumni Association.

"Right now we've sold 1,000 air-travel packages, 225 ground-only packages and 1,500 pregame packages," Klingler said. "We're close to having 3,000 fans make arrangements, and we're really excited with the turnout."

"There's just so much to do in San Diego. There's the zoo, Sea World and the beach. There is going to be a lot of purple out there."

The Alumni Association's air-travel package costs $830 based on double occupancy. It includes round-trip airfare, three nights hotel arrangements, ground transfers, a game ticket and a ticket to the Alumni Association's pregame party.

However, the deadline for making reservations for the air-travel package is Friday.

"People need to hurry up, and they need to decide if they want the air package," Klingler said. "I wouldn't be surprised if there is a big rush this week. That's why I recommend people to make their decisions."

The land package costs $390, including hotel arrangements for three nights, ground transfers, a game ticket and a ticket to the Alumni Association's pregame party.

"Both of our packages are really good deals," Klingler said. "The land package is a good one for people that have already made their own air arrangements or for people that are going to drive out there."

People can get further information about the Alumni Association's travel packages through the bowl hotline at 1-800-898-2695. Manhattan residents are encouraged to use the Alumni Association's office line at 532-6260.

Klingler also said the Alumni Association had just started to market the bowl packages to its alumni in California, Nevada and Arizona.

"I really hope that they are interested," Klingler said. "The response so far out there has been positive, though. It's going to give a lot of alumni a chance to see K-State for the first time in a long time since they are so far away from Kansas."

CLINTON SENDS OFF AMERICAN TROOPS TO BOSNIA ON PEACE MISSION

BAUMHOLDER, Germany (AP) — President Clinton gave anxious American troops reassuring orders Saturday, telling them to strike immediately and with decisive force if threatened with attack in Bosnia. Thousands of soldiers roared back their thanks.

On a cold, foggy afternoon, 4,000 troops of 1st Armored Division stood in formation in camouflage fatigues for a send-off from the commander-in-chief.

Many of them were combat-tested in the Persian Gulf War, and Clinton said, "America summons you to service again. This time, not with a call to war but a call to peace."

Facing a threatening mix of snipers, ethnic hatreds and millions of mines planted under snow-covered fields, the troops are about to embark on America's riskiest military mission since the Gulf War. Their job is to police a peace agreement after Europe's bloodiest war in a half century.

German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, accompanying Clinton, said Bonn would send 4,000 troops to Bosnia, the first deployment of German troops outside their homeland since World War II. He said America's participation was "an absolute necessity and it is wise."

The main body of American troops will start moving out from bases in Germany after the Bosnian peace treaty is signed in Paris Dec. 14. By February, 20,000 U.S. soldiers are to be in Bosnia, headquartered in the northeast town of Tuzla. Five-thousand others will be deployed in Croatia and Hungary in support roles. Those in Bosnia will be joined by 40,000 troops from about 25 other countries.

White House press secretary Mike McCurry said Clinton and Kohl were briefed by U.S. military commanders and Clinton grilled them with questions concerning risks, training, resources and troop morale.

The officers feel like it is going to be a stable environment for U.S. forces, he said.

GOP OPPOSES DEPLOYMENT

WASHINGTON (AP) — Shortly after a White House meeting on Bosnia with President Clinton, Speaker Newt Gingrich convened the House GOP leadership in his Capitol conference room.

One by one, from Majority Leader Dick Armey of Texas to New York's Rep. Gerald Solomon, an ex-Marine, the group expressed strong opposition to Clinton's decision to send American ground troops to uphold the peace agreement.

Phone calls from the public, they noted, were running against deployment by staggering margins of 50-to-1 or more, despite Clinton's speech the night before appealing for support. Armey had just said publicly that "getting a winning vote ... would be like pulling teeth through the back of your head."

Gingrich, while no fan of the operation, counseled caution in the Tuesday meeting. With the initial deployment of forces imminent, Republicans need to be careful not to undermine the thousands of troops who will eventually go there, he said, according to others in attendance.

These officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Gingrich added he was not crazy about the idea, but the president's got a tough job when it comes to making decisions on foreign policy issues such as Bosnia.

STAMPS REPLACE VOTING BOOTH

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — These are head-spinning times to be a voter — or a politician — in Oregon.

On Friday, Mark Hatfield announced he was giving up the U.S. Senate seat he's had 30 years. The news came in the midst of Oregon's first-in-the-nation vote-by-mail election, a contest to replace the state's other long-serving Republican senator, the disgraced Bob Packwood.

Eager candidates are still glad-handing shoppers, visiting seniors' centers and crowding the airwaves. They intend to campaign right up to Tuesday's voting cutoff, the Democrats among them keying on their best chance in decades to win a Senate seat from Oregon.

Yet despite the crackling political climate, voter reaction is ho-hum at best. After all, nearly half of them already made their choice, licked a stamp and slipped their ballot through a postal slot days, even weeks, ago.

Salem pollster Mark Nelson blames the mail-in ballot for part of the tepid interest, despite the election's roots in scandal — Packwood's sexual improprieties and related ethical lapses — and its place in history.

"There's just something about Election Day, with people going to the voting booth, then talking to their family and friends about it," Nelson said.

The tickets were expensive. Mom and Dad wanted you home over the holidays. The airlines were booked. Traveling 2,000 miles and eating 6 billion Stuckey's pecan logs would be way too much on your system. You still wanted to be there, though. It's OK, you bought the book. Three photographers and in-depth articles covered the Holiday bowl experience for you. You can sit back and re-read those memorable moments again and again. Cecil Blake, author of "Throughout the Prism of African Nationality," talks about African values Friday evening during a speech and panel discussion sponsored by the African Student Union and the Union Program Council's Multicultural Committee.

African values crucial to future

Jamie Willey
staff reporter

African government needs to be based around African values, said Cecil Blake, author of "Throughout the Prism of African Nationality," Friday night.

The social organization of Africa now is based on the ideas of the countries that colonized Africa, Blake said.

"The 21st century is upon us, and we do not have to wait until the year 2000 to take a stance as where we will go as a continent," Blake said.

Basic African core values include respect for life, land tenure systems that ensure productivity for all, respect for leadership institutions, respect for elders, collective ownership of resources, a harmonious relationship with nature and protection of community as a whole, Blake said.

Blake said the African continent needed a willed process of social change that takes into consideration core values and human and natural resources.

"Because Africans are allowed to have social change influenced by external sources, they sacrifice their core values," Blake said.

Training programs and Western think tanks that implement developmental projects can lead to a government in Africa based around Western core values.

Blake said he was not calling for the isolation of Africa, but Africans need to know themselves well before dealing with others.

"If we keep looking at ourselves as others judge us, we won't get anywhere," Blake said.

In a panel discussion after the speech, Wayne Nafziger, professor of economics, said he agreed that economic planning should be based on African perspectives.

"The idea of Africa having control of their own planning is very important," Nafziger said.

Emizet Kisangani, professor of political science, said African core values and western democratic values were almost the same, but Africa still needs help from democracies in the West.

Kevin Dayo, freshman in chemical engineering, said Africa needed to find a way to stop tribal conflict before going to a democratic system of government, and Africa needed to know what kind of democracy it wanted.

Gaspard Nderagakura, graduate student in sociology, said it would be difficult for Africa to gain control of its economic planning and become a world power.

"I do not remember one person, or institution, in the world who has been willing to relinquish power so the little guy could thrive," Nderagakura said.

Nderagakura said Africa must look within its system of values and get a consensus on how to govern the continent. He said Africa then must learn to interact with the rest of the world.

"If we're going to compete in a world that we did not build with rules we did not make, we better learn how to play the game," Nderagakura said.

Blake said he had a lot of hope that Africa could thrive in the 21st century.

"When you read what were saying about ourselves, that kind of liveliness in the discourse is a source of hope," Blake said.

Blake's speech was sponsored by the African Student Union and the Union Program Council's Multicultural Committee.

Musician interacts with audience

Sara Edwards
staff writer

Woody Lee took the stage around 10 Friday night at TW Longhorn's. Lee kept the audience of about 250 entertained by playing about 20 songs, some original tunes and a few songs by other artists.

"The main thing I like people to feel is, 'I had a great time. I want to come back and see him again,' and feel like they're taking me home," Lee said.

Lee played popular songs from his new Atlantic Records album, such as "I Like the Sound of That" and "The King of Pain." Lee also played "Get Over It," his first radio release and the title of his debut album, and "Salt and Water," his Nov. 20 release.

Most of his original songs were upbeat, but "The King of Pain," which he sings as a duet with Tracy Lawrence on his album, was a typical slow song perfect for couples to take a spin around the dance floor.

Throughout the night, Lee kept in touch with the crowd by asking where the beer drinkers were or "Are we havin' fun yet?" As the night wore on and the beer kept flowing, the audience got more into the show.

"He's an up-and-coming country star, and I like to listen to them because they've always got a new sound instead of the same old stuff," Robert Price, Manhattan resident, said.

At some points, Lee would come to the edge of the stage and get down in the audience.

"His personality, his ability to get down into the crowd and his ability to get with people from Manhattan amazes me," Dave Steele, music director for KXBB-FM 104.7, said.

Lee said he preferred to play in clubs and bars because that's where he started out.

"I like people to feel like they're part of my success," Lee said.

Lee has been on tour since early last spring. In addition to singing, he also writes songs. He has written "Always Have, Always Will" for the country music group Shenandoah.

This was Lee's second performance in Manhattan. He performed with Lonestar in September.

Lee decided to come back to Manhattan because he had a free night after performing in Independence, Mo.

"They called me on Tuesday, and that's how we got the date," Scott Simmons, assistant manager of Longhorn's, said.

B104.7 helped to promote the show.

Lee said he liked the atmosphere in Manhattan.

"This crowd reminds me a lot of Texas. They have a real respect for country music," Lee said. "Hey, what better place to go than Manhattan, Kansas?"

Lee got started in the music business when he was 17. In 1993, he was signed by Atlantic Records.

"Out of all the frustrating trips I made to Nashville, I showcased for Atlantic Records and I was seen by them," Lee said.

Lee's influences in the country music business include George Strait, Alan Jackson, Garth Brooks and John Anderson.

Lee said his biggest performance was when he played Fanfare in this past year in Nashville, Tenn. before an audience of 25,000 people. He also sang the national anthem before an audience of 200,000 at Daytona.

Lee, 27, and his wife and 4-year-old daughter have homes in Dallas and Nashville.

"I had a great time tonight. When I come back again, I hope to see everybody again," Lee said.

'Cinderella' charms McCain crowd

Portia Sisco
staff writer

Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein's fairy tale classic "Cinderella" came to McCain Auditorium Saturday.

This was the first tour for the magical musical "Cinderella."

Filled with humor and romance, "Cinderella" was a family-oriented production with an talented cast and enchanting music.

Leslie Lorusso played a lovely, shy Cinderella, complemented by a brooding prince, Matt Clemens.

Clemens is a graduate of the University of Alabama. He had two duets with Lorusso and a tragic solo, "Loneliness of Evening."

Clemens exhibited excellent tonal quality and projection as a singer and confidence as an actor.

The stepsisters, played by Lisa Adams and Rebecca Fink, sang a comedic duet titled the "Stepsisters' Lament."

With exaggerated makeup and outrageous lines, Adams and Fink were the perfect gaudy, obnoxious stepsisters to Cinderella.

The stepsisters added comedy through their sibling rivalry and their incredible selfishness and stupidity, with absolutely no redeeming qualities.

"Cinderella" features a clever transformation scene in which Cinderella and her pumpkin are magically transformed for the ball. Using smoke and a realistic double, Cinderella's rags turn to a stunning white ballgown.

Laura D'Agostini was a beautiful and wicked stepmother with a sharp tongue.

In "A Lovely Night," her cold exterior is weakened by Cinderella's romantic story of the ball. D'Agostini was the perfect antagonist to the innocent Cinderella because of her dark beauty and her bad temper.

"Cinderella" had a novel set design that added to the drama of this classic fairy tale.

With the use of special lighting and a transparent screen, the prince could sing his solo while dancers performed a poignant ballet behind the diaphanous screen.

In the final scene when Cinderella marries her prince, local children played flower girls and groomsmen for the couple. In white dresses and black-and-white suits, the children were a lovely addition to this light-hearted musical.

"Cinderella" is charming because of its humor and appeal to people of all ages.

With artful music and a well-chosen cast, "Cinderella" follows in the tradition of classic musicals with its family appeal and traditional values.

Supporting beer sales at games logical choice

Senate supports the sale of beer at events taking place at the KSU Stadium and Bramlage Coliseum.

At Thursday's meeting, Student Senate threw its support behind making beer available inside KSU Stadium.

It is supporting a worthy cause. Changing K-State's policy of not allowing beer inside the stadium during football games will tap an untouched source of revenue for K-State and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Besides this, people might not be as apt to bring half a liquor store with them when they cheer for the Wildcats.

If fans know they can buy beer at the concession stand, they might not think they have to be stocked up in case they run out.

Student Senate's resolution supports three main points in this issue.

Consuming cereal malt beverages in the KSU Stadium's parking lot should be legalized on game days.

Senate supports the sale of beer at events taking place at the KSU Stadium and Bramlage Coliseum.

Senate also encourages President Jon Wefald, Vice President Bob Krause, Athletic Director Max Urlick and Bramlage Coliseum Director Charlie Thomas to consider this proposal.

Although Senate is on track with the resolution, the implementation of beer sales at the KSU Stadium should be approached cautiously.

Before the policy is changed, beer should be sold on a trial basis to gauge fan response and to determine whether it will be economically viable.

Also, a trial basis will allow time to see whether beer sales would affect the number of alcohol-related incidents.

Hopefully, football fans will soon be able to enjoy both a Wildcat victory and a beer at the same time.

Money plays dubious role in love, companionship

I always have thought money can't buy love. But, can it? I have always wondered about relationship with an older woman, and now I have the opportunity.

My last column dealt with relationships and potential success that depends on choice of mate.

Last Monday night, I received a phone call from a mid-40s widow I had met during a trip to Kansas City, Mo., in mid-November. She is a woman who has built her own company after the death of her husband and now is in the process of building a new company that is on the cutting edge of a new technology. She is quite wealthy and successful in her industry. Her drive and persistence are incredible.

Our conversation started as a professional one. She asked me various questions about my future career plans and background in marketing and business.

At the time, I thought it was a potential career opportunity. As the conversation continued, her real wants and desires, which were for a more personal than professional relationship, came to the surface. I am a usually a blunt and to-the-point kind of guy. So I asked her what she wanted, and she told me.

On Friday afternoon, we met for the second time in Kansas City. She had the night planned out beautifully.

Dinner was at a trendy restaurant on the Country Club Plaza and then off to a musical at Crown Center, then back to a suite at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel overlooking the lights of the Plaza. She was the perfect hostess. The conversation was quite entertaining, and we had much in common.

I have acquired an enjoyment for the finer things in life and delight in good food and wine, luxurious furnishings, sensuous clothing and lots of passion.

To put it another way, everything which delights the senses. This highly successful woman could provide me with all the finer things of life. But in exchange for what? That is what I am still trying to determine.

Did I travel to Kansas City just because she was wealthy and could provide me with things I enjoy so much? The answer is hell, yes. Will I do it again? Probably. At this point in my life, what do I have to lose? I kind of like the idea of being a kept man or a toy boy; however, how long does this last and at what cost to me?

Our society has some kind of unwritten rule that has set a predetermined age ranges for proper marriages — that an older man with a younger woman can only mean one thing. And if an older woman is with a younger man, people say, what do they have in common? With men dying at a younger age than women, then an older woman and a younger man may be the way it should be. If both people are happy, then who's business is it, anyway?

Can money buy love? I know it can buy companionship.

I believe it is an individual decision that takes lots of thought and can never be made until the situation arises.

Scott Smith is a senior in agricultural economics.

Lagging behind other countries, U.S. rulers don't measure up

It's coming.

The metric system is going to be a part of your life whether you like it or not.

Personally, I like it. It's so much easier to think in terms of measurements that are all divisible by tens than the ridiculous English system we are now using.

I'm sorry, but my mind just doesn't work in terms of one-eighths and one-sixteenths. Whole numbers and multiples of 10 make much more sense. Give me metric measurements instead of fractions any day.

There is no doubt the United States will eventually have to fully convert to metric — and it is the global village that is going to force it to happen. The United States is a nonstandard island in a world that has adopted a global standard of weights and measurements. The rest of the world long ago switched over to the metric system.

And it is going to hurt us if we don't adapt. U.S. companies are increasingly finding that exporting our products overseas is being hampered by the fact that our products often don't meet metric standards.

The Japanese and Europeans in particular see our lack of metric compatibility as an impediment to making U.S. products available there. Metric makes good business sense.

system was going to be necessary for the change to be made in this country. People need to get used to metric, so it will be comfortable, not strange.

Some TV shows have already started doing this — have you noticed that on the "Star Trek" series these days, metric is the only system of measurement used?

So I made a conscious decision — wherever possible, I would use the metric system in my everyday life.

If anyone asks me, I am 2 meters tall and weigh 158 kilograms. I often get blank looks when I say that, but I think it's important to get people thinking about those kinds of things in metric.

When doing measurements, I use centimeters instead of inches. When talking about distances, I use kilometers.

Does this make me a metric snob? I guess so.

But I think the transition, when it eventually comes, will be easier on me than it will be on the rest of you, who haven't done their homework.

So I encourage you to start thinking in metric in your personal life. If you truly believe that metric is superior, put your measurements where your mouth is. Individuals have an affect on the culture in this manner.

KEEPING RENTALS SAFE

Editor,

I would like to express my disgust of the living conditions in Manhattan.

I have been exposed to many hazardous conditions since I have moved to Manhattan. One of the first things I encountered was this horrendous smell coming from our restroom. The smell was sewer gas fumes.

At the time, I didn't know the dangers involved with sewer gas, but I did know I didn't want to live with the smell.

After I informed my landlord of the problem, he told me he would get a plumber to fix the problem. After a week or so, nothing had been done, so I called him again. He told me the plumber had said nothing could be done about the smell.

I was angry and frustrated, but I didn't know what actions I could take to resolve the problem.

I was telling one of my instructors of the problem, and he told me to call the city code inspectors to have them look at the problem.

As soon as the city inspector walked into my bathroom, they told me the smell was terrible and I shouldn't have to live with it.

They also said this sewer gas could explode. I didn't know it was that serious a problem.

Pat Ball called my landlord and told him she was going to inspect our apartment.

The next day, our sewer problem was taken care of.

I can't believe the response the city got from my landlord when I argued with him for months on the issue.

This supports my reasons why the students of K-State need to get a mandatory rental inspection program implemented for the city of Manhattan.

With a little more than 70 percent of the student body living off campus, I'm sure we would have a strong enough group to get this action passed.

With a rental inspection program, landlords would have to make our houses and apartments safe to live in.

It is time for the students to take a stand and see this program through to ensure the safety of not only ourselves, but for future students.

If you have any problems with your rental property, contact Scott Smith, the director of consumer and tenant affairs at 532-6541.

► CULTURAL NIGHT

Bengalis celebrate

■ Group hopes night will become annual event

Nicole Kirby
staff reporter

Girls in Bengali costumes and the smells of curry filled Woodrow Wilson Elementary School's auditorium Saturday night.

More than 200 people attended Bangladesh Nite '95. Members of K-State's Bangladesh Student Association organized the night and cooked a traditional meal and performed Bengali dances and songs with their families.

The group served a meal of chicken curry, a rice dish called palao, a split-pea dish called dal and a dessert of rice pudding.

"It's spicy and hot, so some people don't like it, but it's really good for us," Jahor Roy, the group's treasurer, said about the meal.

The cultural dances included women and little girls in traditional costumes, each dancing to a Bengali song and keeping time with the bells on their ankles.

A group of children with butterfly wings on their backs danced to a song called "Projapoti projapoti, kothay peley amon rongin pakha," about a little girl who wants to dance with the butterflies instead of being in school.

Other performers sang modern Bengali songs, accompanied by traditional musical and percussion instruments.

Dulal Bhowmick, Tajul Imam and Shuvendu Chakrabartee, a trio of folk singers and musicians from New York, who were TV artists in India, also performed at the event.

"We know their group. The lead singer is my friend," Bimal Paul, the group's adviser and professor in geography, said. "In fact, University money helped us to get them here from New York. If the lead singer hadn't been my friend, it would have cost a lot more."

The Bangladesh Student Association received support from the Student Governing Association, the International Coordination Council and the Office of the Dean of Arts and Sciences.

The Assistant Provost of International Program, William Richter, gave a short speech at the beginning of the cultural program in support of the event.

"This is the first Bangladesh Nite, but we hope this will be the first annual Bangladesh Nite," Richter said. "They bring a rich cultural heritage to the campus, as well as to the community."

The show was presented in both English and Bengali.

Afrin Kanal, age 9, performs a dance during Saturday night's Bangladesh Nite '95 at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School. The event featured a traditional meal, dances and songs.

► TRANSPORTATION

K-State works to repair roads

► K-State teams up with other universities and the Mid-America Transportation Center to improve the quality and safety of roadways.

Jonathan Yeomans
staff reporter

When driving down the highway, the monotonous rumbling of the tires hitting potholes and cracks in the pavement can be irritating.

K-State has officially joined a transportation consortium in an attempt to do something about those potholes and cracks.

Eugene Russell, professor in civil engineering, leads K-State's involvement in the consortium as associate director and member of the executive committee.

"Eighty percent of the pavements in this country are below fair," Russell said. "There is a deterioration of the infrastructure of our roadways."

K-State is doing research with the Mid-America Transportation Center, which is funded by the Federal Highway Administration and the Federal Transit Administration.

"Our research is proposed and accepted by the executive committee at the center," Russell said.

K-State's partners in the consortium are the University of Kansas, the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, the University of Missouri-Columbia and Columbia University.

Mustaque Hossain, assistant professor of civil engineering, is studying the feasibility of using recycled tires for crash cushions on highways.

"We are trying to use tires as impact material," Hossain said. "That is our first cycle of research, but we haven't started yet. Contractual obligations have to be sorted out first, and it is usually very expensive."

Hossain said that in the future there might be other projects, but it depends on their results.

"We will start looking at second-year proposals soon," Russell said.

"The center pays the schools in research money."

Russell said there were problems with pavement and safety problems everywhere in the world, but this region does not have the congestion problems of larger cities.

Jarrod Kastanek, senior in marketing, said he thought the road problems in Kansas began with the construction.

"When I worked road construction, everything was to be done on time rather than quality. And the supervision was minimal," he said.

"We were just high-school kids out there pouring concrete."

► BLACK STUDENT UNION

Love Week promotes racial unity on campus

Becky Klenk
staff reporter

Understanding and loving others will be the focus of K-State's Black Love Week this week.

"The events are positive, real direct and personal, and that's what this week is all about," said Jawwad Albulhaqq, president of Black Student Union and junior in political science.

The week, which has been done at other Big 8 schools, will include a unity walk, movie night, volleyball tournament and more. BSU is sponsoring the event.

"We want everybody to come regardless of color, religion or beliefs — all we ask is that they leave all stereotypes and opinions at the door and come in open-minded," said Wallace Gary, member of BSU and sophomore in secondary education and biology. Gary is also a co-chair for the BSU committee organizing Black Love Week.

Kimberly House, member of BSU and junior in marketing, said Black Love Week should unite African Americans on campus.

"The purpose is to bring African Americans together to show more love and unity, and we have events to fulfill the purpose," House, who is also a Black Love Week committee member, said.

Gary said events with the goal of bringing students together will take place Monday and Tuesday.

The rest of the week, students involved will participate in events to help the faculty and community, Gary said.

"Every staff and faculty member, regardless of position or title, should feel that this is their week, too, because I think a lot of people overlook that, and they are just as important," Gary said.

On Wednesday, Alpha Kappa

Alpha is host to a volleyball tournament at Ahearn Field House, and BSU is asking everybody to bring a canned good as admission.

The canned goods will be given to a community charity.

"This is to reach out to the community," Gary said.

A brown-bag luncheon with the faculty is planned at 11:30 a.m. Thursday in the Union Big 8 Room. The luncheon is a chance for faculty to voice their opinion and concerns about students, Gary said.

CATS FACE ILLINOIS TONIGHT

The 3-0 Wildcat men's basketball team travels to Illinois to take on the Fighting Illini in the team's first regular season road game of the year. Look for coverage in tomorrow's Collegian.

Hatcher's spurs 106-
88 victory

Todd Stewart

assistant sports editor

"Sometimes teams that live by the three, die by the three." K-State coach Tom Asbury wrote this on his team's chalkboard in the locker room and then saw it come to life.

Aided in part by miserable 4-of-22 three-point shooting by Marshall, K-State defeated the Thundering Herd 106-88 Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum to raise its record to 3-0.

Leading the Wildcat offensive charge was senior point guard Elliot Hatcher, who returned for the game two weeks earlier than expected after dislocating his shoulder in a practice and broke out for a career-high tying 32 points.

Initial diagnosis from doctors was Hatcher was to miss three to four weeks; instead, he missed only two games.

"We certainly missed his presence, and we knew we would," Asbury said.

Hatcher made his presence known on the court early and started the scoring in the contest with back-to-back three-point goals, but where Hatcher really made the difference was in the second half, when he was sent to the free-throw line 15 times, making 13.

For the game, Hatcher was 14-of-16 from the free-throw line and 8-of-12 from the field.

Asbury said playing an up-tempo Marshall team that will put players on the free-throw line often, was an ideal comeback game for Hatcher.

"He means a lot to us in any type of game, but in a game like tonight, you've got to have a guy who's experienced," Asbury said. "That's a good style of game for him to come back in."

Hatcher said he thought the key for success was mental.

"I just went out there with a lot of confidence," Hatcher said.

Hatcher and the offense were also helped out by career highs from sophomore forward Mark Young and redshirt freshman guard Paco May, with 19 and 18, respectively.

May said a key in the game for the Cats was having played Marshall last year, a game the Cats won 87-81.

"We played them last year and knew what to expect," May said.

In fact, it was a May dunk at the 2:50 mark of the second half that put the Cats over the 100-point barrier for the first time since the 115-77 win over Fresno State in the 1994 National Invitational Tournament.

The hero on that day was Askia Jones, setting the Big 8 record for points in a game with 62, but everything on Saturday just kept coming back to Hatcher and his return to the court.

"That how I want him to play at anytime against anybody," Asbury said. "He wants to have a big senior year."

Hatcher said that despite the initial diagnosis, he wasn't at all surprised by the swiftness of his return to the court.

"I guess they just thought it was worse than it was," Hatcher said.

"I knew it wasn't a four-week injury, but you've got to listen to the doctors."

Asbury said the timetable for Hatcher's return was not set in stone.

"Those are always guesstimates," Asbury said. "He's had every injury imaginable, and he'll bounce back quicker than the average guy."

Up next for Hatcher and the Cats is the first regular-season road game, Illinois, but Asbury said it was important for his team not to look too far in advance and instead take every game one at a time.

"Every game's important for us," Asbury said. "They all count the same amount."

Sophomore Mark Young is fouled on the way to the hoop. Young scored a career-high 19 points against Marshall.

Freshmen Rhodes, May steal show against Marshall

Ryan O'Halloran
staff writer

Granted, Elliot Hatcher and Mark Young did lead the way Saturday afternoon. Hatcher tied a career high with 32 points, while Young scored a career-best 19 in K-State's 106-88 win over Marshall.

But in the long-range scheme of things, the win over the Thundering Herd represented a break-out game for freshmen Shawn Rhodes and Paco May.

Rhodes, who played 13 minutes in place of the foul-plagued Tyrone Davis, scored eight points, but dished out three assists and recorded three blocks.

"It was definitely a confidence booster for me today," the freshman out of Wichita said. "I hadn't played really good the last couple games."

"When Tyrone got in foul trouble, I knew I was going to have to go in and fill his shoes."

May, meanwhile, came off the bench to play 26 minutes, scoring 18 points on eight-of-12 shooting.

"As a team, we played harder and with more intensity than against Emporia State," the redshirt freshman said. "We didn't come out ready to play Tuesday night."

It will definitely help my future to get a lot of playing time this year, so I can keep building experience.

SHAWN RHODES
WILDCAT FRESHMAN FORWARD

May and Rhodes each showed the crowd of 6,886 spectators what to expect for the next four years in the second half.

For May, it's a driving and slashing game mixed with a solid outside shot — all of which will result in dozens of lay-ups and field goals.

With Marshall's style of play — full-court press, double-teaming on the ball and using a match-up zone defensively — lots of room was left for K-State to roam once it broke the press.

"Coach (Tom Asbury) told us that once we break the press, to go down and pound it in on them, not slow the ball up and wait for them to come from behind you," May said. "And that's what we did."

K-State followed the instructions as it topped the century mark for the first time since 1994.

The Cats did it Saturday with a myriad of lay-ups and dunks off the fast break.

"We played them last year, and I knew what to expect," said Young, who had five dunks for the day. "We knew it was going to be like that — that's what they like to do and that's what we like to do."

The type of game that goes up-and-down the court and the shot clock isn't a concern suits May, who can either drive for the lay-in, or stop and pop for the outside jumper.

"As soon as we broke the press, we looked to score," May said.

Rhodes showed the crowd that he's every bit of the passer Asbury built him up to be prior to the season.

"I've always been a pretty good passer for my size," Rhodes said. "I worked on it a lot in high school."

It was definitely a confidence-booster for me today. I hadn't played really good the last couple games.

PACO MAY
WILDCAT FRESHMAN GUARD

Whether Rhodes looks to pass first or looks to shoot initially is based on the situation.

"It does kind of depend," he said. "If my shot is off, then I'm going to look to pass it more, but if I'm feeling it shooting-wise, I'll shoot it more."

With May and Rhodes seeing heavy minutes and contributing in big ways as freshman, it means only good things for the future.

"It will definitely help my future to get a lot of playing time this year, so I can keep building experience," Rhodes said.

Women go 1-1 in Memphis tournament

Dan Lowerenz
sports editor

K-State suffered its first loss of the season Saturday, falling to host Memphis in the finals of the Lady Tiger Classic.

The Wildcats dominated Grambling State in the opening round of the Classic, jumping to a 24-point lead in the first half before going into the break up 42-22.

The Lady Tigers would not give in, whittling the Wildcat lead to single-digits before succumbing to the Cats 79-71.

Junior post Andria Jones led the Cats with 20 points off a career-high 10-of-12 from the field. Sophomore wing Brit Jacobson added 14 points, while leading the team in rebounds with 11. Junior wing Missy Decker used 3-of-4 shooting from the 3-point arc to reach 11 points.

For the third time in four games, the Cats took a solid lead into halftime only to see their opponents come back in the second.

"I think we lose our concentration more than anything else," Wildcat coach Brian Agler said.

In the other bracket, Memphis annihilated Alabama State, 116-32, setting up a K-State vs. Memphis final Saturday. Agler said tempo and execution would be the keys to the final.

"We have to break their press and we need to hit our shots — make them guard us," Agler said.

But the Cats couldn't overcome the home team in the final, falling 72-57 to the Lady Tigers of Memphis.

The Cats took a 34-26 deficit into the break and shot only 38.8 percent in the second half.

"We had some good shots in the first half, but they just didn't fall," Decker said. "We worked hard; we competed. But they got some runs on us and we didn't react well."

Agler said the Cats allowed themselves to be dominated in the post and didn't execute their offense down the stretch.

"We weren't bad in the first half, but we didn't execute in the second," Agler said. "I wasn't happy with our offense, and we didn't execute well defensively in the post."

Decker said the collapse of the Cats' post defense was the result of the failure of players off-the-ball to help out in the post.

"They gave us a lot of trouble inside," Decker said. "We didn't help enough in the post — both the post and perimeter players."

The Cats were paced by Jacobson's 21 points, followed by 16 from Decker. Jones and sophomore point guard Amanda Chamberlain each had five rebounds, and Chamberlain had six assists.

K-State returns to the home court Wednesday with a 7 p.m. face-off against Ohio University.

Netters' season ends at NIVC

Shana Newell
staff writer

The K-State volleyball team finished its season this weekend. After splitting four matches at the post-season National Invitational Volleyball Championship at Kansas City, Mo., the Wildcats are 29-12 on the season.

The Cats began play Friday morning, dropping their first match of the tournament to Pepperdine. Losing in four games, K-State was defeated by Pepperdine 15-7, 15-6, 7-15, and 15-11. "K-State played extremely well in all four matches, with the exception of the first two games against Pepperdine," Coach Jim Moore said.

The Cats bounced back in the third game against Pepperdine to win, outlasting Pepperdine 200 to .083, but the bounce was not high enough.

The team was led in the first match by junior play-set-hitter Yolanda "Toie" Young. Young had a team-high 13 kills, hitting .379 for the match. She also had one service ace, eight digs and three block assists.

K-State's bounce continued as it defeated Drake University in four games Friday afternoon. With scores of 15-9, 9-15, 15-12 and 15-8, the Cats hit a solid .369 as a team for the match.

They were led by Young and junior middle blocker Kate DeClerk. Young hit .444, with 18 kills and 10 digs. DeClerk had a team-high 24 kills, hitting .583 and contributing 14 digs. Freshman hitter Kim Zschau had the team high against Drake with 20 digs.

"Virtually everyone played well throughout the tournament," Moore said. "But Katie had a phenomenal tournament. Toie had a great tournament. Kim Zschau, I thought, played extremely well. But virtually everyone played well."

The Cats were unstoppable Saturday morning when they took on Rice University. Again, the match went into four games, but K-State emerged with the victory in hand after winning 7-15, 15-8, 15-11, and 15-11.

The team was again led by DeClerk who hit .485 for the match. She had 20 kills, seven digs, two solo blocks and five block assists. Defensively, the Cats kept the ball off the floor with a team-high 15 digs by sophomore hitter Val Phillips and 12 digs by sophomore setter Devon Rynning.

Fatigue began to set in for the Cats as they took the court against Rhode Island. Having already played in three matches, K-State faced a somewhat more rested Rhode Island squad that had only played in two matches at the time.

But victory was still in sight as K-State forced Rhode Island into a five game match, recording scores of 10-15, 15-6, 9-15 and 15-2.

"We outscored Rhode Island," Moore said. "They didn't do anything special to beat us. They weren't any better than we were." In the end, the Cats lost the fifth game 13-15, but only after a hard-fought battle, outlasting Rhode Island in the final game 222 to 167.

"Fatigue just got to us," Moore said. "I really think that was the key factor. They had only played two matches before us. We had already played three. We were fatigued."

DeClerk led the Wildcat attack once again, hitting .500. She shelled out a team-high 21 kills. DeClerk also had 13 digs. Senior hitter Jill Dugan also had a good match against Rhode Island, hitting .346 with 12 kills and a team-high 14 digs.

Moore said the tournament was very competitive.

"Our pool was very even. I would say that it was the toughest pool," he said.

Rhode Island advanced from the pool to participate in the semi-finals, which were Sunday.

MUSIC REVIEW

Benefit concert brings house down with acoustic jam

contributing writer

A benefit concert at the Manhattan Arts Center for Habitat for Humanity converted an unsuspecting union of about 200 into a celebration of humanity Saturday.

Tom Prasada-Rao and Tom Kimmel, singers and songwriters, captivated the crowd and raised almost $1,000 for the cause.

Encouraging the audience to sing along with covers like "Get Together," the stiff crowd was broken in early. A vulnerable, yet empowering tone was set for the kind of music that breaks all inhibition and leaves you feeling weary with life and drunk with love.

When the P.A. system broke, no one, including the performers, expected a success, much less an almost sacred ceremony of two troubadours and an intimate connection with the audience.

"When we decided we should take down the system and just play acoustically, we thought we'd just make the best of it and stay cheerful," Kimmel said.

"It was a real surprise that turned into a real blessing," he said. "It was a really magical experience, and it's a night I'll never forget."

Although it was originally planned that Kimmel would open for Prasada-Rao, the performers decided to improvise and alternate songs, jumping in with spontaneous harmonies.

"We knew we had two excellent musicians coming, and we heard that they had been working together, so we decided to take advantage of that," said Mitchell Strauss, a Birdhouse productions organizer and professor in clothing textiles and design.

"It really says something about the musicians that under the pressure of such adverse circumstances they could pull this off," Strauss said. "And they really had the audience in stitches at times."

A soulful respect and playful curiosity made evident a powerful chemistry between the artists.

Both musicians used a humanist approach with a conscious compassion that aroused contagious empathy. "I loved it. It was like unplugged without MTV's plug," Doug Jones, Manhattan resident, said.

One of many highlights of the night was when Prasada-Rao asked if anyone could recite a Robert Frost poem. Spontaneously throughout the audience, someone would recite a line and then from across the room someone else would take over, and this continued until the poem was done and by the last lines, an entourage of voices had embraced to finish the poem.

The room was completely silent, absorbing the effect of such an unexpected connection. It then broke into giddy, enlightened applause.

Joining the performers for Kimmel's "Over My Shoulder" and "Blue Train," was Robin Harrell, a friend and fan of the performers and a singer and songwriter from Hastings, Neb. She is scheduled return to Manhattan in April to open for L.J. Booth.

"It is so neat the way that they are listening to each other and playing on it," Harrell said. "To be able to bring in two songwriters of this caliber really reflects the community."

Both musicians said that although they had doubts about performing totally unplugged, neither would have changed a thing if they could have had the option.

"It turned out to be a real blessing," Prasada-Rao said, "like a gift from something you don't expect to be a gift."

at the stadium since the alcohol policy had been more stringently enforced.

Fans are not allowed to have alcohol in the stadium or parking lots. He said bottles and cans of beer had been confiscated and kegs poured out.

He said people have become more aware of the policy because of the new enforcement policy.

Wendy Strevey, Senate intern coordinator, works at Bramlage taking money at the parking lot gates, and she also said problems in the parking lots had decreased this season.

"Half of my constituents are under 21 and can't drink," she said. "Why should they have to deal with the problems associated with alcohol?"

Aubrey Abbott, Student Senate representative to Faculty Senate, said she opposed sale of alcohol in the stadium because people would not have the opportunity to sober up before they had to drive home.

Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, said she thought the game atmosphere that has been built since she started going to games in 1982 would be destroyed if alcohol consumption and sales were allowed.

"I can remember going to football games and being thrown up on. It was pretty gross to me," she said. "I think we have come a long way in controlling the stuff at football and basketball games."

"I have seen too many incidents and one too many fights," she said. "So much happens when people get drunk."

Janelle Moore, arts and science senator, said adults should be able to consume alcohol if they wish.

"The problem is not adults consuming alcohol," Moore said.

"It's public drunkenness," she said.

"We should be enforcing public drunkenness and taking care of people who have had too many."

The resolution will be forwarded to the administration, including K-State President Jon Wefald.

BUDGET

SGA vows to combat cuts

Cori Cornelison
staff reporter

Student Senate's Governmental Relations Committee voted unanimously Sunday night to sponsor a resolution to encourage the governor and Kansas Legislature to ignore proposed budget cuts for K-State.

The governor's budget director proposed budget cuts that include $3.2 million for the main campus, $158,763 for College of Veterinary Medicine and $1.6 million for the Extension Systems and Agriculture Research Programs.

It also includes $168,672 cuts for the College of Technology at K-State-Salina.

The budget cuts would eliminate more than 63 full-time employees and $460,000 in other operating expenses at K-State. It would also eliminate about 200 class sections.

K-State-Salina would lose three full-time employees and $27,000 in operating expenses.

If the budget cuts are made, K-State might have to cut operation hours, and the number of resources might have to be reduced at Farrell Library, Aaron Otto, committee chairman, said.

The proposed reductions would also eliminate three graduate positions and one faculty position for the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The proposed bill also requests a 2.5-percent salary increase for staff and student wages.

In other business, committee members discussed a proposed resolution concerning the ability of student government associations within the state to use student fee dollars for lobbying.

The Kansas Attorney General's Office ruled that it was illegal to use fees generated by the student body for lobbying efforts.

The office based its decision on a California circuit court ruling that dealt with partisan efforts only.

Otto said he would like the Legislature to interpret and clarify the legality of using student fee money for student organizations to lobby for Kansas Board of Regents' universities, which remains essentially non-partisan.

He said he has tentatively scheduled two trips to Topeka for members of Student Governing Association to lobby about 11 different issues in February and March.

The committee also voted to sponsor a Student Senate resolution that would support the legalization of slot machines at Kansas racetracks.

The slot machine legalization proposal stipulates 70 percent of the state's cut of the revenue would go to the regents' building fund, 20 percent would go to the state's 19 community colleges and 5 percent would go to Washburn University in Topeka.

The committee also will sponsor Senate resolutions to support additional state funding of the Farrell Library project.

The library needs an additional $1.6 million for the project.

It will also sponsor a resolution to encourage the Legislature to increase the number of ROTC scholarships or tuition waivers at regents' schools and another resolution to make it easier for military dependents to be classified as in-state students.

REVIEW

Christian bands leave fans with message

Claudette Riley
staff writer

Live performances by two popular, contemporary Christian music groups in McCain Sunday night left students screaming.

Jars of Clay took stage as smoke flushed balcony seats with the lingering promise of a rock performance.

The vibrated tranquility of lead vocalist Dan Haseltine shone beyond his lived-in street clothes, the jilted pound of a hip-side tambourine and lit candles.

A folk-alternative sound poured out as a jittering ocean of calm ministering the word to a packed crowd of more than 700 young adults and college students.

Haseltine foreshadowed Christmas with a grinch mix of "Little Drummer Boy" off their self-titled album.

"A song at Christmas that isn't given much attention is the story of a young child who doesn't have very much, but he was given a gift, the gift of being able to play the drum," Haseltine said.

"His gift was only shadowed by the gift that God gave to him."

Cooling into sweet, pitch-perfect vocals over the addictive slamming of melodies and synthesized echoed calls, Jars of Clay also paid homage to the virtues of gourmet coffee.

Matt Odmak played the cappuccino machine in "Good coffee is strong coffee," a song composed in honor of the bean beverage.

The jammed fluctuations of "Flood" wrenched of heartfelt storm analogies, was reflectively thankful for the saving graces of God. In an excited fury, the crowd shouted back the well-known chorus, "Lift me up."

Tracee Kinzie, student in Christian education at Manhattan Christian College, said he had heard both groups on Christian radio.

"The Jars of Clay style is different from other groups in that it hits you right where you are," Kinzie said. "They admit that everyone gets down once in a while and needs God to lift them up."

Karl Leech, youth group leader at Vineyard Christian Fellowship church in Minneapolis, Kan., brought a group to the concert.

"I was real frustrated with the heavy metal my daughter was listening to. I wanted music with lyrics that meant something and that lifted her up," Leech said.

"She wasn't interested in traditional worship music. These Christian rock concerts have helped her in her faith, and I'm glad the groups have moved into some different secular areas."

Leech said he shows videos and plays CDs of Pray For Rain to his youth group.

"These guys reach out and get the kids' attention. It's the same music they'd hear on secular radio stations but with Christian lyrics," Leech said.

"I grew up on rock music and like this music myself, but I want them to know the love and views of Christ, whatever way they take it in," Leech said.

Pray For Rain bombed up onto the stage like an explosion of power. True to its claim, the trio belted out a Beatle-esque sound modified and sped up through plaintive instrumentation.

After the first song, guitar problems for Joel Hanson allowed 10 minutes of improvisation when Jars of Clay returned. Dancing to hokey disco music, the group alleviated tension with a hip, synchronized goofiness during the final stop of its 35-city Great Lengths tour.

Patrick Andrew, lead vocalist for PFR, offered a screaming fan his bottle of water during the break. The spirit of Christian charity fell abundantly from the stage. However, it lost stride in the balcony as post-college age patrons continuously requested that standing, dancing students take their seat.

In the personal testimony song "Mercy Man," PFR moved into a thrash-filled groove propelled by the concentration of sharp, electrical chords.

Concert-goes looking for quiet, Sunday-morning Bible hymns backed by a single organ would have been disappointed.

Both groups showed up to give a rock performance their influences — the Byrds, R.E.M. and Dan Fogelberg, would be proud of — except with a different message.

They did just that.

Deck the halls with rays of sunshine.

Workshop dispels myths associated with weight training

■ Participants learn weight-lifting techniques

Heidi Evert
staff reporter

Exercise is an important part of our daily lives.

That is why Rachael Cunnick, registered dietitian from the Riley County Health Department, Lonnie Kilgore, assistant professor for kinesiology and James Griffing, program coordinator for L.I.F.E., decided to have a weight-training workshop.

"The reason why James, Rachael and I decided to do this was because there's a lot of misinformation about weight training," Kilgore said.

The workshop, sponsored by L.I.F.E. and KOLA FM-103.5, drew 20-30 students and community members Saturday to the Natatorium. Participants spent three hours learning about weight-lifting techniques and participating in workshops.

Dave Jones, Manhattan resident, said he attended the workshop because he wanted to learn.

"I do competitive power lifting. I wanted to learn more because these are the folks in the know," Jones said.

Susan Gillard, senior in accounting, attended the workshop to get information about exercising.

"It's hard to find out the appropriate way to exercise," Gillard said.

There are many benefits of weight training. Some of those include an increase of lean body weight and strength, and a decrease of body fat.

"Weight training has a lot of the same health benefits as aerobic training," Griffing said.

Kilgore explained people should have goals before beginning a training.

Lower repetitions, 1-6, should be done with heavier weights if a person is trying to increase strength. If a person's goal is to increase muscle size higher repetitions, 6-12, should be used, Kilgore said.

Power, the combination of speed and strength, can be achieved by doing moderate, 3-5 repetitions.

It is also important to carry out each repetition with maximum speed, he said.

It is most often recommended that people should rest 30 seconds to one minute in between repetitions, and if a person wants to gain strength he or she should rest for a minute or longer.

"The reason why James, Rachael and I decided to do this was because there's a lot of misinformation about weight training."

Lonnie Kilgore
Assistant Professor for Kinesiology

Resting 45 seconds or less between repetitions should increase muscle size, Kilgore said.

Griffing said people should change their routines every one to two months, work the weak body parts early in the routine and do warm-up sets — one or two lighter sets of each exercise.

Griffing said that people should not exercise the same body parts every day because the body needs time to recover.

Rachael Cunnick, registered dietitian at the Riley County Health Department, leads a class in stretches before a weight-training workshop in the Natatorium Saturday afternoon. The workshop was sponsored by L.I.F.E. and KOLA-FM 103.5.

► RECRUITMENT

K-State fights to attract brightest Kansas high school graduates

Rachelle Harkness
staff reporter

K-State has made a pledge to keep the best and brightest students in Kansas and at K-State.

Since 1986, K-State has been cultivating a program to bring top high-school students to K-State.

"President Wefald established an enrollment management program in 1986. This was a foundation that brought highly motivated, bright students of Kansas to K-State," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president and dean of student life.

About 87 percent of students at K-State are from Kansas, but recruitment does not stop there.

"We have a targeted recruitment program in Nebraska, Colorado, Missouri and Illinois. We have been fairly successful in working with the alumni chapters," Bosco said.

K-State's admission representatives play an important role in recruiting students. They are generally recent K-State graduates who have had an extraordinary experience at K-State.

Amy Coulson, who is originally from Arkansas City, said she remembered the K-State representative who visited her high school.

"It was always a big deal in high school to get to go talk with representative from other schools. I was always trying to make the decision between OSU and KSU, but the K-State recruiter was so excited about K-State. He played a big part in making my decision to go to K-State," Coulson, junior in marketing, said.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said letting students know about the friendly atmosphere here at K-State played an important role in recruitment.

"If we can get students to come for a campus visit, then they can truly understand what it's all about. They have the chance to meet and interact with faculty and students," Krause said.

After the students are here, there are two areas K-State follows up on.

"In the early part of fall, freshmen will receive calls from volunteers on campus just to see how the students are getting along. It's part of the K-State CARES program," Krause said.

The second area involves four or five focus groups for new students.

"We pick students at random who are usually K-State scholarship recipients. About 15 or 20 will have lunch with us. In turn, we ask them to come in and let us know how their experience at K-State is going," he said.

Regents concerned about accountability

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

The Kansas Board of Regents, the University of Kansas and K-State think they have a solution to the budgeting problems created by declining state revenue.

Since fiscal year 1990, K-State and KU have been falling further behind their peer institutions in funding while the other regents institutions have been gaining ground.

Enrollment for the universities has been projected to increase over the next eight years. K-State is expected to have a student body somewhere between 24,000 and 25,000 students in eight years.

Tuition accountability, the proposal put forth by the two universities, will enable them to keep tuition related to enrollment increases, keep a portion of increases in tuition and close the funding gap between them and their peers.

It would make the universities more accountable for the money they spend and allow them to plan ahead for revenue deficits.

"We are not well funded," said Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance. "In fact, we are worse off than we were five or six years ago."

Rawson said the problem had been created by inconsistency in state general fund contributions to the universities.

"The state gives more money to the smaller schools because tuition pays more at K-State and KU," Rawson said. "Little schools get plums. K-State and KU have large budgets, so they don't need money."

In the past three years, K-State has asked for enrollment adjustments to pay for increases in students, but the state has not always given the additional dollars.

Rawson said tuition accountability has three components. The first is linear tuition, which will begin in fall 1996.

Under the current fee system, students pay the same whether they take seven hours or 14 hours. Although no more revenue is generated to pay for the instruction, the University has to provide the instruction.

"The student hasn't brought more money, but we've had to provide seven more hours of work," Rawson said.

Linear tuition establishes a relationship between the number of hours students are enrolled in and the

Pay off tickets with food

Holly McConkey
staff reporter

Paying off parking tickets just got a little easier thanks to K-State Parking Services.

Until Dec. 8, students can receive half-off a parking ticket when they bring in a canned-food item.

The collected food items will be donated to the Flint Hills Breadbasket and distributed to the needy in Riley County during the holiday season.

"Essentially it's a humanitarian gesture, and it's also a public relations gesture to those who are wanting to pay their parking tickets," Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said.

This is the first and only time Parking Services has sponsored a food drive, Archer said.

After the food drive is completed, Parking Services will evaluate it to see how successful it was and decide whether it wants to do it again next year, he said.

"We are doing pretty good with it so far," Archer said. "We really encourage people to take advantage of it."

The Flint Hills Breadbasket is trying to stock its shelves after giving out more than 1,000 food baskets for Thanksgiving, said Shirley Bramhall, executive director for the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"If you came in and took a picture right now, it would be pretty empty.

CHEAP TICKETS

► Students can receive half off a parking ticket by donating one canned-food item. Ticket payments and donations will be accepted at Burt 128 between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

We hope to have it stocked back up for the holidays and to be able to put food into the baskets," she said.

Bramhall said she appreciated the students' efforts in collecting food for the needy this year.

"The food will definitely serve a need," she said. "Every dollar and every can donated helps every step of the way."

Riley County has a 21.2-percent poverty level, and a 59.9-percent low-to-moderate income level, Bramhall said.

The high number of working poor in this area is considered to be directly related to the high population of students and Fort Riley soldiers, Bramhall said.

"As far as we're concerned, that doesn't make them any less hungry," she said.

The number of students bringing in cans has slowed down since the food drive first started, said Kaysie Moore, student employee for Parking Services.

First U.S., NATO troops land in Sarajevo Monday

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — In a near-freezing drizzle that hinted at the winter ahead, the first NATO troops landed in the Balkans Monday to begin setting up a peace mission that will bring 20,000 American soldiers into the Bosnian conflict.

Three camouflaged British C-130 Hercules transport planes touched down in Sarajevo carrying 28 NATO soldiers: French, British, Belgians and the first two Americans.

"We'll be setting up the headquarters for the bigger force to come down," said Sgt. Matthew Chipman of Beardstown, Ill., who arrived with Sgt. Todd Eichmann of Kansas City, Mo.

In Croatia, 56 British communications experts arrived in the port city of Split from Brueggen, Germany. Some will stay at Split, a key transit point for Bosnia. Others will head for Sarajevo and Tuzla.

Defense Secretary William Perry ordered 3,800 American reservists Monday to prepare for duty in Bosnia and U.S. troops already in Germany got ready to move into Hungary and set up staging bases.

The 2,600-soldier multinational enabling troops moving into Bosnia and Croatia will set up communications, plan transportation and arrange supplies in the 10 days before the signing of the agreement to end 3 1/2 years of war in the former Yugoslavia.

After Balkan leaders sign their accord Dec. 14 in Paris, NATO will start dispatching its 60,000 peace-enforcing troops, one-third of which will be Americans.

Some lawmakers have concerns about U.S. participation. Members of Congress who visited Sarajevo over the weekend said both the Bosnian government and Serbian leadership had promised them U.S. soldiers will be safe, but that Bosnian Serb objections still worried them.

As part of the vanguard, the U.S. is sending 735 soldiers to Bosnia and 730 to Croatia, according to Pentagon figures. Perry said the entire enabling force would be in Bosnia or on its way by the end of the week.

But Chipman said it was undetermined when the rest of the advance troops would arrive.

"Everybody is hoping as soon as possible," the sergeant said. He also said he and Eichmann left their base in Augsburg, Germany, so quickly he didn't have a chance to say goodbye to his parents.

POLICE CHASE ENDS IN 1-VEHICLE ACCIDENT; MOTORCYCLIST INJURED

Riley County Police Department officers were led on a chase by a Harley Davidson motorcycle through the side streets of Manhattan early Saturday, Dec. 2.

The chase began in the 1100 block of Moro Street after an Aggieville foot patrol officer reported a possible intoxicated person operating a yellow and white Harley Davidson.

"Another officer who was in the area observed the motorcycle turn north on 11th Street at Moro. The officer immediately activated his emergency equipment to affect a traffic stop, in the 1100 block of Bluemont Avenue," said Sgt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department.

According to the police report, the driver of the motorcycle did not stop but continued west-bound on Bluemont Avenue where he turned north on Manhattan Avenue and into the first driveway on the block.

"The officer pulled into the driveway behind the motorcycle. Rather than stopping, the motorcycle continued northbound through the yards of homes in the area," Moldrup said.

The RCPD officer lost sight of the motorcycle and began to search the area to relocate it.

"At approximately 1:52 a.m., dispatchers received a 911 call from a citizen reporting an injury accident had just occurred at North Manhattan Avenue and Kearney Street, which involved a motorcycle," he said.

"During the chase, speeds never exceeded 30 mph," he said.

When officers got to the scene, the yellow and white Harley Davidson had been involved in a one-vehicle accident.

Motorcycle driver, Michael Willis of Manhattan, was seriously injured in the accident.

"I was knocked unconscious, so I do not remember a lot from that evening or the accident," Willis said in a telephone interview from the University of Kansas Medical Center.

Willis was transported to the Saint Mary Hospital with severe head injuries and then taken by Lifestar helicopter to KU Med Center in Kansas City, Kan.

According to the hospital, Willis is in stable condition with a broken right leg and multiple facial fractures to his left side of his head.

When a copy of the police report was read to Willis he said, "I do not remember that."

The passenger on the motorcycle, Kasey Surs of Manhattan, received minor injuries but declined treatment, Moldrup said.

"Because the driver was seriously injured, we cannot issue any citations or arrest him because the well-being of the person is more important," he said. "So it is now up to the district attorney to charge the driver."

William Kennedy, Jr., Riley County District Attorney, was unavailable for comment.

Willis said that he will have to undergo surgery again on Tuesday and he will be at the center for quite some time.

Willis remains at the KU Med Center.

CITY COMMISSION INTERVIEWS AUDIT FIRMS TO INVESTIGATE TRUST FUND

The Manhattan City Commission interviewed accounting firms Monday night that submitted proposals to conduct performance audits of the city Rehabilitation Trust Fund.

After pressure from the south Manhattan citizens group, the city commission decided to audit expenditures dealing with the fund. The trust fund is related to Community Development Block Grant programs.

The audit is to determine if past city commissioners from the 1970s and '80s acted legally in their expenditure of the trust fund money. Some of the trust fund money was used to pay for salaries.

Representatives from two firms were interviewed. David Lundgren and Company and Berberich Trahan and Company were the two firms the commission interviewed.

"In those years, we were paying the salary of the community development staff," Mayor Edith Stunkel said.

The money in the trust fund came from urban renewal projects of south Manhattan, and it was supposed to be set aside for south Manhattan, Ruby Jones, south Manhattan resident, said.

Residents of south Manhattan wanted to use some of that money to build a park, but the funds have been spent.

"Money started disappearing, and we wanted to know where it was going," Jones said.

During the urban renewal process, homes were condemned and the city bought the land.

"There are several members of our group that had family members displaced by the urban renewal process," said Breta Bloomberg-Ellis, executive board member of the Manhattan Neighborhood Association.

The city then sold some of the lots it had for new homes and businesses, Diana Hatch, south Manhattan resident, said.

"We want to know, basically, was the fund administered correctly? Did the money get put back into the account?" Hatch said.

South Manhattan residents said they thought the money in the fund should have been spent in their neighborhood.

"The money from that was to go into a fund to regenerate that area," Jones said.

The commission is hiring an auditor to see if the way past city commissions spent the trust fund money was legal, Stunkel said.

"If there were improprieties, we probably should deal with those," Stunkel said.

Because some of the records are so old, it might be hard to find all the records. The auditors might even have to rely on oral representation.

"I think if there were people relevant to this decision 10 years ago, I'd like to talk to them," David Lundgren, one of the candidates, said.

The cost of the audit will depend on how long it takes to find the needed information. One auditor said it could cost $15,000 to $50,000. The commission will decide on an auditor Dec. 19.

Chris Oakley

Gary Greer, Manhattan's new city manager, has spent his first week becoming accustomed with his new job and new home.

"I have been going from meeting to meeting, and working on routine activities around the office," Greer said.

Greer took the city manager position, which has been vacant since April, after the City Commission, in a 3-2 vote, decided not to renew former city manager Jim Pearson's contract.

Greer said he has had positive initial impressions of Manhattan.

"I am very excited about the progressiveness of the city and the warmth of the people. I'm excited about the future of the city," Greer said.

Justin Kastner, city commissioner, said he has had a chance to meet with Greer during various work sessions.

"I think that he is great," Kastner said.

Kastner said the process which was used to select the city manager took all summer, and he believed the commission chose the right person.

"We felt like we made the right decision in September. Now I feel like we really did," Kastner said. "I think all the other commissioners feel the same way."

Kastner said Greer has already started making decisions, even though he has had the position for only a week.

"He brings a new perspective to issues," Kastner said. "He has a real positive attitude."

Mayor Edith Stunkel said she is impressed with Greer.

"I have been meeting with him daily. Every time I meet with him, I am more reassured that we made the right decision."

Steve Hall, city commissioner, said he thinks Greer has the personality and temperament to make an excellent city manager.

"I think he is going to be outstanding. He has all the professional background and experience that he needs," Hall said.

Greer said he has three elements

Student teacher wrapping up semester

Heather Stephany
staff reporter

This is the last in a continuing series about a K-State senior's experience student teaching.

As the end of the semester draws near, student teachers begin returning classes to their supervisory teachers and searching for a classroom to call their own.

Within the next two weeks, Kena Tague, senior in English and secondary education, will complete her student teaching and graduate. But for now, she remains in Deloris Berland's English classroom at Manhattan High School.

"Right now I am team teaching," Tague said. "She lectures, and I contribute to her lectures. I'm also observing some other teachers."

Tague observed teachers earlier, but she said she now is getting more out of it because she has learned more and knows what to look for in the teaching. She is also observing teachers in different areas like math, science and computers.

"Ninety percent of what I need to know to teach I learned from this semester of student teaching," Tague said.

Standing in front of the classroom presenting lessons provides student teachers with practical experience.

"It's a lot of trial and error," she said. "You can have a million ideas and try them on paper, but until you have a class you don't know if it will work or not."

Students in Tague's advanced sophomore English class said she has succeeded in teaching them.

"She had a lot of confidence where most student teachers are shaky," Jessica Anderson, sophomore at MHS, said. "I actually learned something from her, which is different from some student teachers."

Joe Pacey, sophomore at MHS, said Tague added variety to the classroom.

"It was kind of nice having someone younger, because a lot of my teachers are older," he said. "It was easier to relate to her."

Pacey and Anderson said one of their favorite lessons taught by Tague was when she dressed up like a gypsy, lit candles and had the students sit on the floor in a circle. Tague told them a gypsy story to demonstrate her short story unit on different cultures.

"She wasn't afraid to use her own style," Anderson said. "She is very interactive and doesn't just stand at the front of the room."

Anderson and Pacey said they think Tague will do a good job teaching in her own classroom.

"I would be perfectly happy if I could have her for English next year," Anderson said. "That would be great."

What Tague will be doing next year remains to be seen. Originally she planned on joining the Peace Corps and teaching English as a second language in an eastern European country.

Now the Peace Corps told her they may delay her work with them for a year, Tague said.

"I still really want to do Peace Corps, but it depends on what happens," she said. "If they say I can still leave in June, then I will go. If it will be delayed, I will go ahead and look for a job."

Serving in the Peace Corps requires a two-year commitment, Tague said. It is volunteer work, but all living and medical expenses are paid. At the end of service you receive a stipend, Tague said.

Man kills 2, blames AIDS

■ 22-year-old says woman gave him the virus

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — A man who claimed a woman had given him AIDS burst into her home with a pistol and shot five people, killing two, before shooting himself to death, police said. Ulysses Miller, 22, was found in the front yard of the house, dead of a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head, police said.

He had been at the home earlier Sunday looking for the 24-year-old woman he said infected him, police Sgt. Ray Torres said.

The intended victim had recently moved out of the house, but at least nine relatives, including four children, were home Sunday evening eating and watching television when Miller entered the house through the garage and fatally shot Henry Crawford, police said.

As Miller moved through the one-story house, unloading 10 shots from a .25-caliber pistol, family members scrambled to escape, police said. None of the children were injured.

"He reloaded several times," neighbor John Barney said in Monday's editions of the San Antonio Express-News.

"He first went in and started firing, then came outside and reloaded. Then he went inside, fired again," he said.

By Monday afternoon, it had not been determined whether Miller was infected with the AIDS virus.

Tests were to be done in an autopsy. Police refused to identify the intended victim or comment on her alleged relationship with the gunman.

Police said there were at least five adults and four children in the house but wouldn't say how they were related.

The dead were identified as Crawford, 38, who lived in the house in the middle-class neighborhood in northeast San Antonio, and Timothy Davis, 27, who lived at Randolph Air Force Base.

Tuition accountability ensures proper funding

The program would allow the universities to better respond to significant increases in enrollment projected in the next eight years.

Part of your tuition check might be going to pay for prisons, welfare and anything but your education.

K-State and the University of Kansas are trying to keep tuition money at universities.

The amount of money state universities receive is determined months before school begins and is based on the previous year's enrollment figures.

All of your tuition money goes to the state and is allocated back to the University.

Enrollment at the schools might increase, but state funding will not. The state pockets the difference for use for other programs.

Universities can ask for supplemental money to make up for the enrollment increase, but the state does not have to give it, and the schools can't budget for this money.

The schools have to provide more services and classes for more students but do not have more money to do it.

K-State and KU are receiving increasingly less state funding than their peer institutions. Whereas smaller regents schools like Fort Hays State and Emporia State are gaining on their peers.

Tuition accountability is a program that would allow the universities to keep 25 percent of revenues generated by enrollment increases. That's like asking for change for a dollar and getting back a quarter.

The program would allow the universities to better respond to significant increases in enrollment projected in the next eight years.

It would also allow the schools to carry over money to use when there are budget decreases, eliminating the need for the schools to ask for more money from the state.

Tuition accountability will be debated by the Kansas Legislature this spring.

If you don't want your tuition money going to pay for cable for convicts, contact your state representatives and senators and encourage them to vote for tuition accountability.

Conspiracies draw attention of extraterrestrial watchers

've discovered that the KGB, working with the Mafia, killed Kennedy (and tried to kill Reagan), because the CIA and National Security Council were conducting high-level talks with extraterrestrials.

This is not a new development. Soon after the Constitution was written, the head of the Bavarian Illuminati killed and replaced George Washington. His name was Adam Weishaupt, it is his face that appears on the dollar bill, and he was operating under orders from the secret tantric masters who rule the world.

So, maybe I've been reading a little too much conspiracy theory lately. Once every couple of years, I get totally engrossed in some far-out paranoid book about who actually runs things around here (theories range from the United Nations to the Rosticrucians).

I really enjoy it, but whenever I read that stuff, strange things start to happen around me — bizarre coincidences, this year and mysterious letters. Spooky stuff.

For example, I think I might have been contacted by aliens on Friday. I could be wrong.

Author and adventurer, Robert Anton Wilson, has a theory about what conspiracy theory does to the brain.

He says because conspiracy theory often relies on strange coincidences as "evidence," reading conspiracy works heighten one's sensitivity to everyday synchronicities.

I certainly have noticed that effect. Just a few days into reading a book about the CIA-Illuminati-extraterrestrial link, CNN reported the CIA spent millions of dollars on research into ESP.

That really shouldn't be surprising, even to people who aren't worried about a possible extraterrestrial connection. There are a lot of strange cases of the CIA throwing lots of money at bizarre research.

And, this time, at least, it only wasted money. The CIA has done a lot worse.

In its infamous LSD research, it decided it might be groovy to keep several dozen black prison inmates on LSD for 70 days. The CIA continually upped the dosage to adjust for increased tolerances.

Anyone who has ever taken LSD can tell you that 70 hours is too long. But what the heck, said those chaps in the agency, we gotta know.

Anything went in those days. People in the CIA were dosing themselves and each other all the time. One former agent remembers how fun it was to slip the acid into their co-worker's coffee without telling them (This is not conspiracy theory, this is true. You only have to go as far as Farrell Library to confirm it.)

Doesn't that explain a lot, though? While LSD, for some people, can fill one's head with lots of neat ideas and pretty colors, it can have quite a different effect if you are, say, the type of person who works for a paranoid espionage agency.

Just think what kinds of dark, wiggly things could have been spawned in the CIA's bad acid trips, and then think about Cold War foreign policy.

I'm not saying that there's any real connection. I'm just saying ...

Anyway, this revelation about the CIA coming out just when I'm reading about its talks with our friends from outer space is well, within the bounds of probable coincidence. But it wasn't the first, and as it turned out, not the last.

Wilson and I aren't the only ones who have noticed this phenomenon. It is widely reported by the people who write these conspiracy books, often with much more mystical and improbable explanations.

I like Wilson's theory the best. It seems very sane and sensible. Even so, the weirdness can get a little spooky. Which brings me to the aliens.

I got a letter Friday. It was in a plain envelope, with no return address. It was postmarked Alaska.

Inside was what apparently is a message from extraterrestrials, calling themselves UMMO. They also have a symbol: )(.

Why either an extraterrestrial, or a prankster, would send me something like this is beyond me.

If they wanted to get in touch with someone in the media, they could have found literally tens of thousands of people with larger audiences than me.

They would have been better off with Hunter S. Thompson or maybe Rush Limbaugh.

Anyway, you can make your own judgments. The last bit went like this:

WHY DO YOU MAKE DECISIONS THE WAY YOU DO? WE HAVE BEEN WATCHING YOU AND KNOW THAT YOUR SPECIES' ABILITY TO MAKE RATIONAL DECISIONS DECREASES DRAMATICALLY WHEN YOU WORK TOGETHER IN GROUPS OF MORE THAN SEVEN.

WHAT PUZZLES US IS THAT SEVERAL OF YOUR OWN SCHOLARS KNOW THIS. WHY, THEN, DO YOU USE A DEMOCRATIC METHOD OF GOVERNMENT IN YOUR AMERICA, WHERE THE GROUP IS SO LARGE THAT RATIONAL THOUGHT IS ELIMINATED?

)(- UMMO

Well. The more I think about that last bit, the more I'm sure it comes from some earthly hoaxster.

Every conspiracy buff knows we don't actually live in a democracy. Geez.

UNWELCOME AT BRAMLAGE

Editor,

As students at K-State, my sister and I are outraged at the inaccessibility of Bramlage Coliseum.

With graduation approaching, we sent out invitations, never imagining that relatives as far away as California would want to come and share this important occasion with us.

We also never imagined we would have to call my uncle in California and tell him Bramlage is inaccessible to him.

When my sister called Bramlage, she was told, rather flippantly, the elevator would be inaccessible due to the graduates lining up for the ceremony.

When asked what alternative plans Bramlage officials had made, my sister was told, again with an I-could-care-less attitude, my uncle would be welcome to sit in a box and watch us graduate on a TV screen within the coliseum.

This is outrageous. My sister and I invited family and friends who have supported us to see the culmination of their energies.

If they are willing to come all the way from California and North Carolina to watch us "cross the stage," I find it reprehensible to ask them to sit in a "box" and watch us on a TV screen.

Why on earth would an institution like K-State hold graduation ceremonies in a place that isn't accessible — unless they just don't care? We are sure our uncle is not the only visiting relative who has trouble with stairs.

K-State's powers that be need to ask themselves how many grandmothers, great-grandfathers, uncles and other relatives will not be able to attend graduation ceremonies because Bramlage has only "boxes" available to those unable to use the stairs to reach their seats.

My family is a close one, and K-State's solution to this problem has hurt us. If my sister and I had known when we came to K-State that the family and friends who enabled us to pay nearly $4,000 per semester each and who supported us emotionally would not be welcome at graduation, we would have considered a more caring institution.

We have the distinct feeling that, like thieves in the night, K-State has taken the money and run.

Christian doctrines benefit Christians, non-Christians

Many of you know Rushie, my good friend who is very opinionated but not often right, (or always right if looked at from a political perspective).

Well, you see, Rushie and I had fallen into a discussion of Christmas. Rushie is a devote Christian and was relating to me the joyful story of the birth of his savior.

"Yes," I said to Rushie. "The life of Jesus itself is quite a wonderful story."

"You agree," he said, mystified now. "You've always written off my preachings before as a bunch of poppycock."

"Well, of course, most of them are," I said. "The teachings of Jesus, however, provide many good examples that both Christians and non-Christians alike can benefit from."

"Explain on, my friend," Rushie said.

"Well, first look at a part of the Christmas story itself. Those who came to see Jesus after his birth were the shepherds and the wise men."

"Yes I know it well," Rushie said. "Luke 2:8-20 and Matthew 2:1-12."

"Whatever, but in Jewish society at the time shepherds were considered among the lowest of the low because they often could not get into the temple for certain rituals. The wise men were gentiles, not even a part of Jewish society," I said.

"None of the richest or most powerful men in the country came to visit. None of the priests came to behold the marvelous child."

"Instead, it was the poor and those who were not even a part of the dominant religion who came to see him," I said.

"So what are you saying?" asked Rushie.

"What I'm saying is that even at birth, Jesus is showing a tendency not to discriminate on the basis of station in life, race or belief system."

"Well, I'll be," Rushie said.

"Also take, for instance, the story of the distribution of the bread and fish."

"Matthew 14:13-21," Rushie chimed in.

"OK, but in this story, Jesus is surrounded by a multitude of people who need to be fed. All the food that can be found amongst the whole crowd is two fish and five loaves of bread."

"Jesus takes up this food and feeds the multitude with it. Notice how Jesus didn't ask how many people had worked for that food. He didn't even enquire as to how many people there accepted him as the son of God. He just feeds the people."

"Yes, I can see how you would like that one," Rushie replied snidely.

"Also, doesn't Jesus say something like, 'Love your neighbor as yourself'?"

"Yes — in Matthew 22:39," Rushie confirmed.

"This does not say love your neighbor only if they are like you or if they live a lifestyle that you agree with. Doesn't Jesus also say something about making peace?" I asked.

According to the Bible,

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the sons of God."

Matthew 5:9.

Rushie intoned in a high, ringing voice.

"Yes,

well let's not turn this into a sermon, but strangely enough, I never see Jesus advocate violence.

This is only done in the Old Testament."

"Matthew 5:43, 'Love your enemy and pray for those who persecute you,'" Rushie.

"Anyway, what I'm saying is that it's really good to know that myself, an agnostic, and Christians can agree on so much. I like the idea of making sure everyone is fed and, obviously, they do too."

"Amen, brother Lach," Rushie said.

"I'm also in agreement with them on the point of not making distinctions based on economic status, race or belief system among people."

"Woah — slow down with that stuff," Rushie stammered.

"It's heartening to know that Christians like the idea of peace just as much as I do."

"Of course," Rushie said. "No good Christians will ever be responsible for the senseless acts of violence perpetrated throughout the world."

"So surely, Rushie, many of us who are non-believers can at least agree on the points of peace, no discrimination, and providing for all. Merry Christmas my friend."

"Merry Christmas, comrade," Rushie said.

HUNT

Game hunting has always been a popular activity, especially in the fall months. The more popular hunting seasons are for quail, pheasant, duck, goose and deer. These seasons are open primarily in mid-to-late fall.

According to Kansas Wildlife and Parks, in recent years the number of hunters is decreasing as more people move to urban areas.

Crowe said he's been involved in hunting since he could remember. "My family has always been involved in outdoor activities. My grandpa got me started shooting at an early age, and I started going out to watch with my dad and him," Crowe said. "I didn't actually start hunting for myself until I was 15 or 16."

Crowe said the best way to become involved in hunting is to spend some time with others who are hunting. A hunter education course, covering hunting knowledge and safety, is required before obtaining a hunting license.

"I'm glad we have a hunter's education course," Eric Taylor, junior in finance, said. "It's mostly common sense stuff, but I think it's a great thing."

Wildlife Biologist Brad Odle, of Kansas Wildlife and Parks, Manhattan district, said free hunter education courses are offered several times a year.

"We hold several in the fall, which begin right before dove season," he said. "We also hold two or three in Ackert Hall throughout the school year."

Taylor said the next step in hunting would be to obtain a license for the particular game you want to hunt.

According to Odle, a general license is valid from Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, costs $12.50 and can be obtained at many convenience stores and gun or hunt shops.

"A person can hunt just about any game bird with the general license," Odle said. "For water fowl, like ducks and geese, a Federal Migratory Bird Stamp has to be obtained for an additional $15 and also a Kansas Migratory Bird Stamp for $3.50."

For big game like deer and turkey, Odle said a hunter must apply for a tag, which is drawn in a lottery process, that designates where and what specific type and gender of game animal you can hunt.

Along with these licenses and tags are limits and restrictions that Odle said are all designed with the game population in mind.

"The numbers of different game animals are constantly monitored and the Wildlife and Parks selects limits per day to protect the numbers," Odle said.

"There is a certain number that will die off each year to disease. Our job is to set those numbers so that those animals are instead harvested and used."

With a permit in hand, a hunter needs to find a safe place to hunt. Crowe said there are many public places to hunt, but many hunters find access to private land.

"The best way to get permission to hunt private land is by going out and asking farmers and ranchers," he said. "Some farmers have a bad view of hunters because other hunters have come through and left trash, messed up land and left gates open."

"If you show them that you are respectful and trustworthy, they will normally let you hunt unless they are hunting the land themselves."

Kansas Wildlife and Parks manage several areas around Manhattan which hunters can use. Among these are the Tuttle Creek Wildlife Area, Jeffrey Energy Center Wildlife Area, Lake Milford Wildlife Area and Nemaha County Wildlife Area.

Odle said Wildlife and Parks is constantly looking for private land to lease for public use.

"We spend a lot of time and money

Abby (above), a yellow Labrador, retrieves a quail that Cody Rolph, Colorado resident, shot. Quail and pheasant season runs from Nov. 11 to Jan. 31 in Kansas this year.

leasing land so that those not fortunate enough to have a place to hunt can also do well hunting. Access to the river is something we try to set up for people wanting to use those resources."

When you have found a place to hunt, the next step, Crowe said, is to plan your strategy. "I study the terrain and feeding areas for birds. It's something you have to just learn from doing it," he said. "For deer, I scout out the trails and find a place to set in undercover."

Taylor said he suggested areas with good cover and also water and food nearby for the best bird hunting. Deer have to be scouted by their tracks and areas that show signs of their presence.

Following a kill, Crowe said it is important to clean the game as soon as possible. When it is warm out, he said he sometimes skins, cuts and cleans the animal in the field before taking it home.

Crowe and Taylor said they felt the regulations involved with hunting were fairly good.

Crowe said there are many people who don't understand hunting.

"There are some people who think that hunting is inhumane. They've never been out in the field," Crowe said. "Others, like farmers have lost respect for the hunters because they don't follow the rules by trespassing and poaching."

"I do know that a lot of people against hunting enjoy the nature, and those areas are funded by the money from hunting licenses," Crowe said.

Hunting is important to maintaining a healthy wildlife population, Odle said.

"Without proper hunting, there would be an overpopulation that would starve, become diseased and die off," Odle said. "We control it, so that there will always be game in Kansas."

BIG 8 PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

(AP) — Nebraska guard Jaron Boone, who has helped the Cornhuskers win two early tournaments and start the season 5-0, has been named the Big Eight Player of the Week.

The 6-foot 6-inch senior scored 30 points in Nebraska's 114-106 victory over Oregon in the semifinals of the Big Island Invitational. He had 25 when Nebraska beat Grambling 99-80 to win the Ameritas Classic in Lincoln.

Forward Erin Scholz of Colorado, who has been in double figures in both scoring and rebounding in six of 10 games this season, was named the Big Eight Women's Player of the Week Monday.

All I want for Christmas ...

I was having a hard time deciding what to write my last column of the semester about. But then the phone rang. It was none other than Old Saint Nick on the phone.

I was stunned to hear his voice. I asked him what he could possibly want with me. He said, "Son, I have been reading your columns, and Mrs. Claus and I kind of like them. I just wanted to call and talk sports with you."

I was pretty excited — this was a great opportunity to get the perspective of one of the most underestimated sport gurus in our time.

With the holidays approaching, I had to ask him who had been naughty and nice this year.

Here was his list of naughty people:

He said that just recently, he had to add Charles Haley of the Dallas Cowboys and Bryan Cox of the Miami Dolphins to this list. Haley was put on the list because of his profound remarks regarding the recent controversy over illegal hits in the NFL.

"They are gonna have to fine me, and I'm gonna tell you right now, if I get fined for some b.s., I'm gonna sue the league. It's crazy, it's b.s., straight b.s.," Haley said.

Cox was put on the list for his remarks after the Dolphins' victory over the Falcons Sunday. Cox had this to say about the negative publicity the Dolphins had been receiving the past couple of weeks:

"I'm tired of this negative b.s. I'm tired of this punk #%%$%&^%&^%#. This is b.s."

Santa said the two would not receive a lump of coal for Christmas, but rather, a box of Ivory soap.

Also on the naughty list were the Alliance Bowl officials.

Santa said certain bowl officials had taken a huge payoff over the past week. He said this was the only explanation for Notre Dame going to the Orange Bowl.

On the nice list, Santa pointed to the offense of our beloved Wildcats.

He said it was so nice for quarterback Matt Miller to spread the ball around to his talented wide receivers. He said Miller's selfish attitude allowed Big 8 records to be broken by his wide receivers and himself.

But Santa said Iowa State was at the top of his nice list.

He said ISU truly knew about the attitude of the holidays. ISU consistently showed in the football season that it is much better to give than receive. ISU was nice enough to allow almost every opponent to gain as many yards as needed to win.

Santa then told me he had to go — this was a busy time for him. I understood, but I had to ask for one last request. I asked him if it was all right to send him my Christmas wish list. He laughed and said, "Of course, son."

Here was my list I faxed him:

10. Please let the NBA referees come back. These replacement refs are really making NBA players mad, and I'm tired of hearing grown men whine.

9. A tie in the Fiesta Bowl. If there is a clear-cut winner and champion, then sportswriters across America will have nothing to argue about.

8. A Northwestern win in the Rose Bowl. The magic season has to have a happy ending.

7. Please, no more Deion Sanders commercials modeled after the show "Dallas." Even I am getting sick of them.

6. At least above-average teams for upcoming scheduling of non-conference opponents in football.

5. A Mike Tyson vs. Don King boxing fight (not on pay-per-view).

4. New uniforms for the Houston Rockets.

3. A 20-win season for the men's basketball team, with a berth to the NCAA tournament.

2. The firing of Dick Vitale.

1. A Dallas Cowboys vs. Kansas City Chiefs Super Bowl showdown. Even though it would be another blowout by an NFC team, it would be nice to see the Chiefs do something in the playoffs before the decade is over.

P.S. You might have noticed that I did not put anything about the Cats' chances in the Holiday Bowl. Well, even Santa knows that the Cats don't need help against any Western Athletic Conference team.

Illinois tops K-State, 82-56

Associated Press

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Kansas State double-teamed Illinois guards Kiwane Garrison and Richard Keene to no avail.

"With last year's ball club, we would have lost if Keene and Garrison had only scored 8 points," Illinois coach Lou Henson said after the nation's No. 21 team frustrated the Wildcats 82-56 Monday. "But we have a lot more depth this year."

Keene and Garrison, the stars of Illinois' upset victory at Duke on Saturday, combined for only 8 points. But Jerry Hester scored 16 and Kevin Turner tied a career-high 13 points as Illinois (4-0) shot 46 percent from the floor.

Kansas State (3-1) fell behind early, and Illinois had comfortable double-digit leads throughout most of the game. The closest the Cats got in the second half was 15 points as a jumper from Anton Hubert brought the score to 50-35 with 14:38 to go.

Illinois led by at least 17 points from there. A 3-pointer from Hester with 4:47 to go gave Illinois its second 25-point lead, 77-52.

Henson began adding second- and third-string players in the final minutes, but the Cats could only manage one field goal in the final four minutes and two free throws from sophomore point guard Aaron Swartzendruber with a 10th of a second remaining.

"We weren't patient enough to get the ball inside. We kept shooting jumpers, and they weren't falling," K-State coach Tom Asbury said.

Senior point guard Elliot Hatcher led Kansas State with 13 points.

Junior center Gerald Eaker grabbed 9 rebounds.

Henson had worried his team would come out flat after the Duke game. But Illinois opened by jumping to an 11-0 lead.

K-State took its only lead of the game, 14-13, with 11:59 to go in the first half on a field goal from Eaker.

"We kind of absorbed that first blow and got back in it, but we simply didn't do enough good things to compete with a team like Illinois," Asbury said.

The Illini also shot 48 percent from 3-point range and 69 percent from the free-throw line.

"That's real good from the arc," Henson said. "We've got some pretty good shooters if we just go up with it."

The Cats shot 50 percent from the floor during the first half, but that percentage dropped to 32 percent in the second half.

K-State also had a 14-13 rebounding edge over its hosts at halftime, but Illinois' aggressive defense finished the game with a 40-35 edge on the boards.

Henson said he was pleased to be in the Top 25 but unsure how long the national ranking would last.

"We have a chance to be pretty good if we just keep working," Henson said.

"This team is progressing much faster, and they are further along than I thought they would be."

Kansas City defies predictions, odds to clinch its division

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — All of the football experts who study the NFL and then bless its teams, coaches and fans with their sage prognostications didn't quite nail it this year.

The team many picked to fall in the middle or even at the bottom of the AFC West — the Joe Montana-less Kansas City Chiefs — now has the best record in the entire league and has clinched its division.

This is not some group of middle-of-the-pack players the experts thought would spend the season wondering how to put their shoulder pads on without Montana's help.

The Chiefs put a beating on the Oakland Raiders at Oakland on Sunday to win the division and gain the home field advantage — the lack of which before has thwarted Coach Marty Schottenheimer's quest for a championship game.

At 11-2 with three games left, the Chiefs may get their shot at settling this NFC-AFC thing in January in Phoenix.

Kansas City, beaten on Thanksgiving Day in Dallas for its second loss of the season, took care of the Raiders on Sunday despite being stunned by a quick touchdown off an interception in the first quarter.

Then quarterback Steve Bono went down with a finger injury.

But depth has made this team.

—Rich Gannon filled in ably until Bono could come back, running in the Chiefs' first touchdown of the game.

—Punt returner Tamerick Vanover continues to produce yardage on special teams, as well as in the role of wide receiver.

—Running back Marcus Allen, a 35-year-old ageless wonder, has found new life and continues setting records, breaking the 5,000 yards-receiving mark on Sunday.

"I care about winning," Allen said Monday after the Chiefs went through a light practice.

"I care about the Chiefs winning. That transcends personal goals."

Or, as safety Brian Washington puts it, "You can't always listen to what you hear."

"You can listen to everybody, but you, yourself, know what's going on," Washington said.

"We figured out what we had. We knew we had to go out and get it done."

The Chiefs are two legs through a road swing that takes them to Miami on Monday night. Then they finish with home games against Denver and Seattle.

"We have an opportunity and it is important that we seize it," said Schottenheimer, who obviously wants his chance at the Super Bowl and did not get it in Montana's two seasons here.

The Chiefs have said over and over that yes, Joe is great, but maybe they are better off without him.

They have won three games in overtime and have consistently come back this year when they could have quit, such as when the Raiders scored Sunday in the first two minutes.

"It's always nice when people think that you can't do it and you do it," center Tim Grunhard said.

"We're doing it."

Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — Those Dallas Cowboys brave enough to venture forth and talk after an embarrassing 24-17 loss to Washington offered no excuses on Monday at a gloomy Valley Ranch.

"This locker room is becoming a bunker mentality," said quarterback Troy Aikman. "From what I sense, this has been a joyless season."

The Cowboys dropped to 10-3 with the shocking loss to the 17-point underdogs and now have to win their next three games to guarantee the homefield advantage throughout the NFC playoffs.

"The success of our season, right or wrong, will be determined by the playoffs," Aikman said. "This team knows a lot of pressure. When we win a game, we were supposed to win it. When we lose, it was always a game we were supposed to win. There haven't been many occasions for celebration."

Aikman predicted a quick rebound for the Cowboys, who have to play at Philadelphia on Sunday.

"Historically, this team plays every well with its back to the wall," Aikman said. "This team is still very much together. I think we will all respond together."

Aikman, Emmitt Smith, Bill Bates and Darren Woodson made appearances in the locker room while others like Michael Irvin, Deion Sanders, Nate Newton, and Charles Haley dodged the media.

Haley had a good reason. His bad back may keep him out of the Philadelphia game.

"Haley is in the worst physical condition he has been since he's been here," Dallas coach Barry Switzer said. "He came up to me at halftime crying. He said, 'Coach, I can't play. My back is hurting bad.'"

Besides a poor running defense, the Cowboys' pass rush has dropped off almost to the non-existent category.

"Our best player is hurting, and the pass rush is going to fall off," Switzer said.

The Cowboys' two middle linebackers, Robert Jones and Godfrey Myles, are nursing injuries and Jim Schwartz may have to be in the middle against the Eagles.

Defensive end Tony Tolbert is playing with two bad knees.

"Tolbert will have to have operations on both knees after the season," Switzer said. "Our defense is really hurting."

Switzer said the Cowboys deserved to lose to Washington the way they played.

"There's no joy in Mudville around here," Switzer said. "In fact, there's no joy even when we win. This loss was devastating. The only win this team will be able to enjoy is the Super Bowl."

Switzer admitted his defense isn't good enough to win a Super Bowl right now.

"We would have to be in a lot better condition," he said.

"We'd have to play with a lot more intensity."

After Philadelphia, the Cowboys host the New York Giants then travel to Arizona on Christmas night.

"We know what we have to do, and it's the hard way," Switzer said. "We have to win three of three."

When refs need make-up, dynasties and other thoughts

What is the most dominant dynasty in modern college athletics? It's not Nebraska football or Duke basketball or even Colorado skiing. It's North Carolina women's soccer.

The Tar Heels have won the last nine NCAA championships and 14 of the last 15. This year alone, UNC went into the Final Four 25-0, having outscored its opponents 108-5 for the season.

But the trophy has found a new home — Notre Dame upset the Tar Heels 1-0 in the semifinals in Chapel Hill, UNC's first home loss in 15 years. Ironically, the only goal was scored when North Carolina's Cindy Parlow accidentally headed the ball into her own net. Even more ironically, that goal broke a tie between teammates, giving Parlow the team lead for most goals in the season.

The Irish then defeated Portland for the title.

So does this mean the end of the North Carolina dynasty?

Not likely. The Tar Heels have 13 freshmen on their 19-player roster, including Parlow — who has been invited to try out for the Olympic team despite being only 17 years old. The Germantown, Tenn., native skipped her senior year, gaining early admissions to UNC by taking classes at Middle Tennessee State over the summer.

It looks as if the Bowl Alliance will actually produce a national championship in football this year. No. 2 Florida sealed the deal by overcoming Arkansas 34-3 in the Southeastern Conference championship.

The Gators will face No. 1 Nebraska Jan. 2, in the Fiesta Bowl.

Speaking of Nebraska, if you watched Nebraska's season finale against Oklahoma, you may have noticed Cornhusker fans throwing tortillas. According to my sources in Lincoln, Husker fans learned the trick from K-State fans. Cool, huh?

Speaking of national champions — and it pains me to say this — did any of you watch Kansas come back to trounce UCLA Saturday? Wow! If the Jayhawks keep playing like that, they are going to be awfully tough to beat.

For Memphis' sake, I can only hope the refs get better with time. There would have been no need for so much make-up if the officiating hadn't been so ugly to begin with.

Memphis has a player on its roster, sophomore Dwelina Smith, who hails from SoHo, Miss.

No jokes, please ("So how's the night life back home, Dwelina?").

Speaking of so-so, the Southwest Conference went out with a whimper Saturday night when Houston defeated Rice in the conference's last game. Rice lost the SWC's first game way back in 1915 — but no one was watching then, either.

With the Southwest Conference gone, it's time to start looking at the Big 12. This year, North Division teams Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas State and Kansas have all been ranked in the Top 10, as have South Division teams Oklahoma, Texas A&M and Texas.

The difference is timing. The southern schools were early Top 10 selections — back before anybody saw them play, they seemed good. Then Colorado beat Texas A&M, Notre Dame beat Texas and everybody beat Oklahoma.

Everybody, that is, except Texas. The Longhorns — the highest-ranked team in the South Division — could only manage a tie with the Sooners, who suffered losses to all four top North Division teams and had to come from behind to beat Iowa State and Missouri.

If the Longhorns are the No. 9 team in the nation, why couldn't they beat the pathetic Sooners? Probably got wrapped up in OU's mystique.

Beatles' 'Anthology' gets mixed reviews from different fans

Portia Sisco
staff writer

Whether you are "Free As A Bird," or "Mr. Moonlight," the Beatles want to hold your hand one more time.

"The Beatles Anthology — Volume One" is a historical look at the music of the Beatles. This collection includes speeches and clips of interviews from John Lennon, Paul McCartney and the band's manager, Brian Epstein.

Jim Beck, freshman in business administration, is a music connoisseur. Beck has more than 450 compact discs, and the Beatles "Anthology" is his first Beatles album.

"Their new song, 'Free As A Bird,' is pretty cool," Beck said.

Nikki Glazier, freshman in arts and sciences undecided, said she disagrees.

"It's awful. The Beatles died when Lennon was shot in 1980," Glazier said. "I think it's along the lines of the Eagles going on tour — they're just doing this for money."

BEATLES FACT:

► Contrary to popular belief, the title for "Lucy in the Sky With Diamonds" was prompted by 4-year-old Julian Lennon's description of a painting he brought home from school, not the drug LSD.

See more facts on the Web at: <http://www.abctelevision.com/>

Sean Stewart, junior in political science, said he has been a Beatles fan for several years.

"I liked them before all of the hype," Stewart said.

"Hallelujah, I Love Her So" was recorded on a borrowed tape recorder at Paul McCartney's house before the band became famous, according to annotation on the compact disc.

"We tried to record little things ... It was very bad quality," McCartney said in an interview on the "Anthology" album.

Stewart said he agrees. "The first CD sounds scratchy because of poor recording. The second one is much better. It has songs you will recognize."

"She Loves You" is a familiar Beatles song on the second CD. The vivacious personalities of the band catapulted this song to the top of the charts.

A few of the recordings are demos and false starts. An example is "I'll Be Back." It shows the stress of recording, and some of the funny ways bands cope with recording the same song over and over.

"It's too hard to sing," Lennon said when he forgot the lyrics.

The second version of "I'll Be Back" is a clean recording. It gives the listener a perspective on the work and the struggles of creating and recording a song.

"Mr. Moonlight" features the band's frequent use of different octaves in duets and trios. The lyrics are simple, and the background drums add an exotic sound.

"Anthology" also includes live versions of classic Beatles songs like "Twist and Shout" and "I Want To Hold Your Hand." With the pressures of performing frequently, the quality of these live recordings is particularly impressive.

Nature park proposal advances

Robert Patnode
staff reporter

Manhattan Parks and Recreation Board unanimously voted to recommend the Manhattan City Commission purchase land in northeast Manhattan to create a nature-based community park.

The recommendation ends four years of proposals and meetings aimed at establishing a park in that area.

Terry DeWeese, director of parks and recreation, said it is a step in the right direction.

"I think it's a good motion because the park board has done a good job of listening to what the community wants, and they're bringing forth that recommendation based upon what they found out," DeWeese said.

According to the board's motion, the community park must fit three criteria. It will include the purchase of at least 50 acres of land, the land acreage should be amenable to a nature park, and there should be an effort to sponsor the park with interested parties.

Also in the motion were six amenities community residents detailed at the Nov. 28 public meeting.

The park will have the following amenities: an enhanced natural habitat with walking and hiking trails, picnic facilities, green and open space for practice fields, playgrounds, street access and parking and other low-intensity activity areas.

"I think it represents needs in that area. I think it takes care of the needs of what they would like to see happen in that area," DeWeese said.

The park proposal will be sent to the commission for approval.

DeWeese said the commission probably won't get to the memo until early next year.

Mike Toy, board member, also made a motion specifying the area to be purchased.

He said it should be the Nixon property. It contains 78.8 acres of land, and it is located directly southeast of Northview Park. Toy's motion was approved by both board members and community residents present.

Steve Pfister, Manhattan resident who has helped in getting a park for the southwest part and now the northeast part of Manhattan, said plenty of land was available for the park.

He also said it was important for the commission to purchase the Nixon property because the rest of the area was prone to floods.

which he hopes to improve on. He said that he wants to improve communication between the city commission and the citizens of the city, utilize improvements in technology and expand and enhance the service that is provided to citizens.

Before coming to Manhattan, Greer was the city manager of Kearney, Neb. Kearney, located in south-central Nebraska, has a population of about 25,000 and a total revenue of $33 million. Manhattan has a population of about 42,000 and a total revenue of $47 million.

Greer, 33, received his undergraduate degree from Park College and his masters of public administration from the University of Kansas. He has worked in Kearney as an assistant city manager and city manager for 10 years.

TEACHER

For next semester, Tague will remain in Manhattan and substitute teach while continuing to work at Holiday Inn.

"In the spring semester, a lot of schools come on campus to interview," she said.

"I'll probably do that. It will be good practice even if they are not hiring," Tague said.

After student teaching at the high school, Tague said she knows she wants to teach English to high school students.

"Before I was pretty much turned off at teaching high school. I had heard lots of horror stories," she said. "Now, I know I can do it and I like it."

Tague said she often had second thoughts about teaching until now.

"It started with my freshman class when I was teaching them 'Romeo and Juliet,' and I realized how much I loved teaching Shakespeare," she said.

"Part of being a good teacher is teaching something you love."

Tague said she learned a lot from her supervising teacher, Berland, and her University supervisor, Patricia Staver.

"The most important thing I learned was to be flexible and adapt. You have to be able to adapt to any situation," Tague said. "And you have to keep a good sense of humor."

With the days until graduation quickly drawing near, Tague's student teaching experience will soon be a fond memory of her college education.

"I think it was fantastic," she said. "I learned more this semester than in my entire college career."

ber British logistics team in Sarajevo, said serving with the NATO force would be better than his previous work as a U.N. peacekeeper in Split because he is now authorized to use force.

"It's the same job," Sgt. Eric Johnson said. "But it's easier this way."

Americans played supporting roles in the U.N. peacekeeping mission that the NATO-led force will replace — running a field hospital in Zagreb, Croatia, helping out with logistics in Bosnia and watching over Macedonia, the only republic to secede peacefully from Yugoslavia.

But these were low-risk jobs. The U.S. soldiers who will form the backbone of the NATO-led peace force will be potential targets, primarily of rebel Serbs unhappy with the terms of the peace agreement.

"We realize it is a difficult mission, but I think we are as well trained now as any force could be," said Brig. Gen. Stan Cherrie, who visited the town of Kiseljak, 13 miles northwest of Sarajevo, on Monday.

The general, head of an advance team of 10 U.S. officers from the 1st Armored Division, said he and his troops accept the risks.

"The danger from accidents and on the roads is very high," he said. "But I would also tell the American public to support this deployment."

In the latest challenge to the international community and to the accord negotiated in Dayton, Ohio, an assembly of Sarajevo Serbs announced Monday that it plans a Dec. 12 referendum on the agreement during which the population of Serb Sarajevo will have a chance to make their views known.

The agreement turns control of Sarajevo over to a new Muslim-Croat federation, and Serbs in the capital are outraged and terrified by the prospect of being ruled by their former enemies.

"The assembly does not accept Muslim-Croat rule over the territory of the Serb city of Sarajevo," said a declaration published after the meeting.

Also Monday, France ordered its general in charge of U.N. peacekeeping in Sarajevo back to Paris after he said the Dayton peace accord was unfair to Serbs in the Bosnian capital.

TUITION

amount of tuition taken in.

Under the linear model, students who take seven hours pay for seven hours, and students who take 14 hours pay for 14 hours of instruction.

"We can define absolutely the amount of money brought in by increased enrollment," Rawson said.

The second part of tuition accountability is tuition retention. The universities want to keep the tuition revenue associated with increased enrollment.

"The state isn't consistent with funding growth," Rawson said.

Now universities ask the state for an enrollment adjustment to fund growth, but the universities cannot depend on that money when making up the budget, Rawson said.

In 1991, K-State requested a $4.8 million tuition adjustment but received $2.5 million. In 1992, the University requested $1.9 million and received no additional funds.

"They didn't fund the growth," Rawson said.

"We didn't keep the tuition. What we're asking is the opportunity to keep that tuition."

The Revenue Consensus Estimating Group projects the state will have a little more than $14 million to spend in fiscal year 1997.

The third component of tuition accountability will allow the universities to keep one quarter of all tuition increases. In return, the universities will not ask for enrollment adjustments.

The state handles tuition as another revenue source. The state collects the tuition money from the regents schools and then appropriates it back to the schools. The difference between the schools' budgets and the actual revenue is a gift to the state, Rawson said.

Since university budgets are based on the previous fall enrollment figures, the universities see very little of the revenue generated by tuition increases.

Most of the excess funds go to the smaller regents schools, he said.

"K-State and KU are disadvantaged," Rawson said.

"We want to keep a quarter of the increase."

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said the most important part of tuition accountability for the University is the ability to keep tuition revenue related to student enrollment growth.

Without the ability to keep growth related revenue the University would have no way of providing classes for the increased number of students expected over the next eight years, he said.

One particularly attractive selling point the universities included in the package is that K-State and KU are willing to live within the revenue generated by tuition, Krause said.

"If we lose enrollments, then we should have to eat the tuition downfall," he said.

The universities will have to keep a closer eye on enrollment projections and work toward changing the mix of in-state to out-of-state students.

For every 100 in-state undergraduate students, about $250,000 is generated. For every 100 out-of-state undergraduate students, about $1 million is generated, Krause said.

Tuition accountability will also give the universities authority for carry over from one fiscal year to the next, which will also help off-set declining enrollment.

The package would also give the universities more flexibility in budgeting and allow them to budget more money where the needs are.

The board approved tuition accountability and linear tuition earlier this year. The proposals will be considered by the Kansas Legislature this spring.

"We do think tuition accountability is an important component for solving some of the problems we see on our campuses," Steve Jordan, executive director of the regents, said.

Jordan said the package gives the universities more control over their destinies.

"We think under this proposal, it will allow us to take the revenue and apply it to enrollment growth," he said.

Jordan said he thought the plan for dealing with increased and decreased enrollment would be a selling point when the package goes before the Legislature this spring.

"We think it has a pretty good chance," he said.

Open doors

Professor emphasizes student-teacher relationships

Rachelle Harkness
staff reporter

What kind of professor wins an outstanding teacher award?

One that is demanding, helpful, friendly and has an open-door policy — or at least that is what students who take Michael Dikeman's classes said.

Dikeman, professor of animal sciences, is one of 10 recipients of the 1995 Excellence in College and University Teaching award in the food and agricultural sciences. "Being a student of Dr. Dikeman's, it's easy to see why he was selected for this prestigious award," Kerry Boydston, sophomore in agriculture journalism, said.

Boydston said she appreciated Dikeman's open-door policy.

"His attitude of helping and befriending students is evident not only in his classroom environment but also around campus," she said.

Dikeman said having excellent student-teacher relationships was important.

"I have an open-door policy with my students. They always have the opportunity to ask questions in class or to stop by and visit in my office," he said.

Contrary to what some might think, Dikeman said his demanding ways seem to be appreciated by students.

"I'm a fairly demanding teacher. It kind of conflicts with popularity, but students seem to recognize that I am demanding and have high standards. Students seem to appreciate it," he said.

David Mugler, associate dean and director of academic programs for the College of Agriculture, has been Dikeman's colleague for 25 years.

"The highlight of my 32 years at Kansas State was to see an outstanding faculty member receive such an award. Dr. Dikeman is most deserving of this tremendous recognition," he said.

Although Dikeman said he was surprised to receive the award, he said he was impressed with the way it was presented to him.

"The kind of recognition that they made was first class. The teaching profession was elevated in the highest level," he said.

Dikeman has two children who have also chosen to become a part of K-State and have chosen majors within his department.

Dikeman, sophomore in animal science, said she was kind of surprised at the news of her father's award.

"I was surprised at first because I really didn't think it was that big of a deal. When I heard about the prestige the award had, I was really happy for him," she said.

The award was sponsored by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

COMPUTERS

Internet users need to take security steps

Collegian staff

Big Brother might not be watching you, but someone else might be watching what you do on the Internet if you're not careful.

E-mail, files, posts to newsgroups and submissions on the World Wide Web can all be logged or intercepted, legally and otherwise, by someone or something almost anywhere in the data's path.

But there are steps that Internet users can take to protect themselves.

John Bucher, director of Computing and Network Services, said Internet users should protect themselves in the same ways they would if they were using other media.

"I think people should be aware of security issues on the Internet as they would be aware of the security issues of other methods of communication," he said.

Bucher cited cordless telephones, which can be eavesdropped on if they lack proper blocking mechanisms, as an example of a common method of communication that, like the Internet, could be less than completely secure.

He said that if users of cordless phones don't block their transmissions or aren't aware that their conversations may not be totally private, they run risks of having embarrassing details about their conversations becoming known.

"The same thing applies to networks," he said. "Whether it's your home or office, you're only as secure as your weakest door, your weakest link."

Bucher said there weren't many ways to make sure the path that data travel was secure.

Users who are concerned about security can encrypt, or scramble, their messages with one of various data encryption programs, including PGP.

K-State's networks have no way of automatically encrypting users' data, which is not atypical of Internet service providers, Bucher said. He also said K-State's computer networks are no more or less secure than most any other network.

Some people use anonymous remailers to hide their identities from other Internet users. These services take e-mail or postings to newsgroups and hide the senders' true e-mail addresses.

While many Internet users employ these services with confidence, one popular anonymous remailer in Finland, (anon@anon.penet.fi), recently was forced to turn over to authorities the true name and identification of an American man suspected of infringing on copyrighted Church of Scientology materials, Bucher said.

Bucher said he believed Internet users should try to obey two basic rules when it comes to anonymous remailers.

KSU FOUNDATION

Building name honors former president

Nicole Kirby
staff reporter

The KSU Foundation's building received a name change.

The Foundation has renamed its home in the old Farm Bureau building at 2323 Anderson Ave.

The new name is the Arthur F. Loub Tower, Mark Moore, Foundation president, said.

The Foundation is a non-profit organization that raises money and donates it to the University for scholarships and improvements to K-State's programs and colleges.

Loub was the president of the Foundation from 1979 to 1994. He spent 38 years in the fund-raising business, including 13 years at the American Cancer Society and 10 years at Michigan State University, before coming to K-State.

"I recently figured out that if I add up all the money that I was responsible for raising in my life, it adds up to about $500 million," Loub said.

The volunteer members of the Foundation's staff decided Loub deserved to be honored for his years of service.

"He did an exemplary job leading the Foundation from where it was to where it is," said Jack Goldstein, who chaired the committee that handled the naming.

When Loub joined the Foundation, it had $2 million in assets and was raising $17 million annually. When he left the Foundation, it had $21 million in assets and was raising $140 million.

He also created the fund-raiser, KSU Foundation Telefund, in which K-State alumni are solicited for donations.

"It is the largest total volunteer telefund in the nation and has the seventh-largest level of giving," Loub said.

Loub led campaigns to raise money for scholarships, Bramlage Coliseum and the Essential Edge campaign, which raised $145 million for use in all of the colleges, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, Farrell Library and Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

"You get to associate with people who have influence and affluence, and they have the wherewithal and desire to help their alma mater," Loub said of working with the Foundation.

"I obviously didn't do it by myself. It takes a great staff working with you," he said.

The executive committee of the Foundation voted to go ahead with the plan in October after the idea was presented by staff members.

"It was the executive committee that followed the recommendation of the staff," Richard Thiessen, the chairman of the committee, said.

BLACK LOVE WEEK

Candle march signifies racial unity

Jonathon Yeomans
staff reporter

About 50 students carried candles through campus Tuesday night as they participated in Black Love Week's Unity Walk.

The celebration was Black Student Union's first Unity Walk signifying the unity of all races, Wallace Gary, sophomore in secondary education, said.

"Hopefully, it will be an annual event," he said. Gary and Paulicia Bender, sophomore in advertising, planned the event.

"We want to overcome all the other things that get in the way of unity like race and religion," Gary said.

Gary said the walk was effective and he hoped to make it an annual event. However, more races should have been involved, he said.

Bender said she was surprised a lot of people walked in spite of the cold.

"There were a lot of people I've never seen before. Even though it is Black Love Week, anyone and everyone is welcome," she said.

The group began the walk after its weekly meeting at the north end of the K-State Student Union and walked to the International Student Center, where their pizza and games awaited them.

Everyone sat in a large circle, and roars of laughter and excitement filled the building while they played Upset the Fruit Basket.

"They had a good time, so I had a good time," Gary said.

"People who didn't know each other before got to talk and interact."

Search continues for rape suspects

Geri Cornelissen
staff reporter

Riley County Investigators are continuing their search for two suspects who raped a 23-year-old Roeland Park woman inside the Sigma Chi fraternity house Oct. 8.

A re-creation of the assault is being broadcast by Manhattan Crime Stoppers to alert anyone who might have information about the assault.

Capt. Steve French of the Riley County Investigations

Division said one tip had been received from Manhattan Crime Stoppers since the assault first aired and investigators are following all leads.

"It doesn't sound real promising. It's not a name or anything,"

On Oct. 8, the victim was followed into the Sigma Chi fraternity house by two men and raped between 4 and 4:26 a.m., French said.

The two suspects are described as black men in their 20s with short-cropped hair. They were wearing dark clothing at the time of the assault.

The suspect, who investigators believe raped the victim, is about 5 feet 8 inches tall and 180 pounds.

The other suspect, who investigators believe was the lookout, is about 6 feet 1 inch tall and 185 pounds.

Contact Manhattan Crime Stoppers at 537-7777 if you have any information about the case.

K-STATE CROP JUDGING TEAM FINISHES FALL SEASON WITH HONORS

The K-State crop judging team brought home the gold this semester.

The team established its reputation at three competitions this semester.

On Oct. 21, it traveled to Hutchinson and finished first. On Nov. 14, it took first place at Kansas City.

And for its final competition, it traveled to Chicago and placed second.

Ryan Higbie, sophomore in animal science and industry and member of the crop judging team, said the team deserved the awards.

"We put our time in for what we got," Higbie said. "We felt like we deserved it."

Michael Ferguson, sophomore in feed science management and member of the team, said the competitions included plant and seed identification, seed analysis and grain grading.

The plant and seed identification category gives participants the chance to identify different seeds and plants according to their shape, color, leaves and other characteristics.

In the seed analysis category, the team members receive a sample of a crop such as barley, oats, wheat or corn. They pick through the sample and remove all the foreign plant and weed seeds. Then they have to identify those seeds.

The participants also receive a crop sample for the grain grading category. Students have to determine whether the seed has had any damage, such as heat or bud damage.

Ferguson said what the team learned from being in the crop judging team was important in agriculture.

"Being able to notice these damages is very important in the agricultural world," Ferguson said.

Dan Lehmann, senior in agronomy and member of the crop judging team, grew up on a farm and wants to return after school.

He said being on the crop judging team would help him in the future.

"I'm planning on going back and farming after school," Lehmann said. "Now I know how to go back and grade the crops."

Lance Gibson, coach and assistant instructor of agronomy, said the team worked 15 to 20 hours a week this fall to prepare for the competitions.

"It amazes me how much time they put in," Gibson said. "I think it shows how dedicated they are."

SANTA ROBS TEXAS RESTAURANT

BAYTOWN, Texas — A Santa Claus outfit provided a disguise for an armed man to rob a truck stop restaurant of more than $5,000 in a Season's Greetings bag.

But the red suit and white beard did not make for a successful getaway.

The robber, who stole a taxi as he fled late Monday night, was chased by restaurant patrons and eventually captured by police. Frank Sidney Smith, a 35-year-old former employee of the restaurant, faced aggravated robbery charges Tuesday, detective Gene Sutton said.

Sutton said the man dressed as Santa told a cab driver to wait for him outside the Country Pride Restaurant. His costume elicited smiles from customers as he approached an office.

He pulled what appeared to be a handgun from his waistband and demanded money from the restaurant safe. The employees began to take the man seriously when he pistol-whipped one of them, and they began filling a red gift sack with cash, Sutton said.

Police recovered the cash and a BB pistol believed to have been used in the robbery.

JUSTICES QUESTION STALKER LAW

TOPEKA—State Supreme Court justices expressed doubts Tuesday about the constitutionality of a law that prosecutors used to charge a University of Kansas student with stalking his former girlfriend.

A Douglas County district judge concluded earlier this year that the stalking law under which David C. Bryan was charged was too vague to be constitutional.

The Kansas legislature enacted the law against stalking in 1992, then changed it several times. It revised the law again during its 1995 session in response to Murphy's ruling.

Four justices, a majority on the seven-member court, were aggressive in questioning the attorneys. They repeatedly asked Jerry Little, an assistant Douglas County district attorney, what behavior constituted stalking under the old law.

"Are you stalking if you stand in the street playing bagpipes at 2 a.m. three mornings in a row?" Chief Justice Kay McFarland asked.

The question in Bryan's case is whether the law is too vague to give citizens fair warning of what conduct is prohibited. If it is, prosecuting someone under it violates a person's rights.

► CHANG GALLERY

Architect constructs unconventional art piece

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

Robert Arens' installation piece, "(Dis)Mantle," now a part of the Chang Gallery, is unconventional for K-State.

Its unconventionality is based mainly on the idea of an "installation" at K-State. We don't see actual installations in these parts too often, so, what is an installation?

Webster's defines "install" as: "to settle in a certain place or condition; establish; to set in position or adjust for use." It also defines "installation" as: "an apparatus, as a system of machinery, set up for use."

Does that help much? If you consider those definitions in terms of art, the picture becomes clear.

In this case, Arens, an architect and an assistant professor of architecture, has installed divided pieces of a mantelpiece from a fireplace into the gallery.

He didn't just set them in a room and call it art, but each piece of the mantle plays off the other; responds to the gallery space itself and questions the conventions of space and humans' interpretations of that space.

Definitions figure greatly into the installation, especially in the words mantle and dismantle.

Arens said he was trying to imply both the noun aspect of the word and the verb aspect of the word — to cover something. To dismantle something is "to strip or deprive of dress or covering."

So, using the verb aspect, Arens arranges the mantelpiece across the space: the internal frame nailed to the West wall, the next two layers on the floor, and the final external structure on the east wall.

Arens has stripped apart this usual wall-mounted, two-dimensional object and revealed a three-dimensional object.

"The object takes the form of the host," Arens said.

Now, this conventional mantle does not react solely to the wall in which it is mounted but becomes a part of the entire space. Arens has achieved some of this spatial play through a taped grid system on the floor, which in turn echoes the arrangement of the track lighting above.

As you move around the gallery, you are passing through this gridded space, and your sense of volumetric space is heightened greatly.

Arens found this mantelpiece in his neighbor's garage.

"It was already a strange juxtaposition," Arens said.

To now place the same mantle in a gallery as an installation is perhaps even a stranger juxtaposition.

Arens is also in the process of investigating the history of this particular mantelpiece — what it has been and what it is now. The mantle was originally from Tennessee and then was brought to Manhattan, where it was eventually placed in the trash.

Arens said by bringing this found object into the gallery, he was restoring the potential value of it.

The Chang Gallery is a special case of spatial circumstances in and of itself. It has no outside. It exists within the confines of Seaton Hall.

"The logic of this space doesn't go beyond its walls," Arens said. "It creates its own logic."

When Arens began this project, he approached it as trying to bring something new to the space.

"You've been asked to bring something new, so you must understand the existing circumstances," he said. "I think those circumstances are mainly contained within this room."

Arens said he began to look at installations as a way to change existing space.

"It's somewhat of a new interest of mine created by a lack of a chance to practice (architecture) here. This is a time to work with real materials."

Arens said there must be a physical human dimension to be architecture — as opposed to art.

Before coming to K-State, Arens practiced architecture in Detroit and then taught at the University of

State leaders focus on rural prosperity

Lisa Elliott
staff writer

A group of rural Kansas businesspeople, legislators and K-State faculty met Tuesday to discuss the importance of rural issues in the state and the nation.

"I think it is extremely important for us to focus on rural issues," Lt. Gov. Sheila Frahm said.

Frahm gave the opening address for the Rural Policy Symposium, sponsored by the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives and K-State. President Jon Wefald gave the welcome and introduced Frahm.

"Today, citizens realize things are changing," Frahm said.

Crop prices are determined by a global market rather than by local or national markets. Poor crops and unusual weather globally can affect the price.

In his welcome, Wefald stressed the importance of rural America in food production for the nation and the world.

"American agriculture is an efficient industry that feeds this country and 30 percent of the population of the world," Wefald said. "American agriculture is still the backbone of American industry today."

Frahm outlined three initiatives she said she would like to have the symposium address to keep rural America alive and prosperous.

The first initiative is efficiency of production.

"You have given us a mandate to do it efficiently and get rid of duplication," Frahm said.

She said Kansans should be looking for duplication on the local level and working toward making services more efficient.

Frahm's second initiative is the water issue. She said a task force has been established to study conditions on the Kansas lower Republican River.

The goal of the project is to create a plan to make the water safe for private consumption and more efficient means of using water for livestock and crop production and industrial uses.

"The heart of the program is combining money and resources and creating a plan," she said. "We think too often in terms of quantity and not in terms of quality."

Frahm's third initiative will improve the quality and value of the agriculture products produced in Kansas.

"Our value-added commodities are doing well," Frahm said.

The 21st Century Club, as she called it, is seeking new economic development opportunities for the agriculture industry.

Members include the Kansas Wheat Growers, Kansas Corn Growers and Kansas farmers.

"Many of us who live on the farm want to keep living on the farm and keep feeding the world," Frahm said.

City audit wastes Manhattan's time, resources

The commission could probably avoid a future audit by parlaying the audit funds into the projects the original Rehabilitation Trust Fund was supposed to finance.

No one likes an audit.

Just the mention of the word conjures thoughts of paying a lot of money to someone for something that happened a long time ago that you can't remember.

The residents of Manhattan should be particularly leery of audits.

The Manhattan City Commission is taking estimates from auditing firms in the neighborhood of between $15,000 and $50,000 to find out where an undetermined amount of money went sometime during the 1970s and '80s and why it might not have been spent on what it should have been.

This is a waste of time and resources.

The audit was launched by the commission in response to pressure from a south Manhattan citizens group. The group wants to know what money from the city's Rehabilitation Trust Fund went to finance instead of being used for civic improvements in south Manhattan.

Certainly, the city must be accountable for funds that might have been used inappropriately. Unfortunately, the city is fully prepared to spend at least $15,000 to investigate this loss. That figure could easily escalate, considering how many walls this audit will run into.

No one is sure how much money was lost or what it was spent on — with the exception that some of it was spent on salaries of the community development staff.

Because this happened 10-20 years ago, there probably won't be anyone still connected with the city to be held responsible for the loss.

The commission could probably avoid a future audit by parlaying the audit funds into the projects the original Rehabilitation Trust Fund was supposed to finance.

At least they would know where the money went.

The New Way.

Holidays mean time for Yoda, Eastwood

Ho, Ho, Ho — Merry Christmas and all that good crud. Prepare yourselves, my little reindeer — it's that time of year again when the less holiday-minded among us get bombarded daily with demands of "Happy New Year" and orders to have ourselves a "merry little Christmas" whether we want to or not.

After having the last warm day of the year celebrated with a streaker, it's time now to batten down the hatches and brace ourselves for the last great wave of commercialism — also known as the holidays.

I am not a Christmasy person myself — never have been, probably never will be. The weather is an important contributor in this area.

I don't like winter. It makes my skin dry out and my hands hurt. I hate to scrape my car windows, and I really don't like dressing in layers. Because Christmas falls during the cold months, I'm usually in an impressive bad mood by the time Yule rolls around. If Christmas fell in July, or even in spring — the real time of Jesus' birth, I'd probably be in a much better frame of mind.

Certain aspects of the holiday are kind of fun — spiked eggnog, mistletoe and lobbing fruitcake at passing cars always make my Yuletide bright. But for the most part, I find myself in the Christmas-is-too-commercial camp.

Does it seem Christmas is striking earlier every year? I could have sworn that when I was a kid, nothing happened until Dec. 1 at the earliest.

My grade school didn't decorate until the last week of classes before break, and the Grinch didn't come on until the middle of December.

Now the official opening of the holiday shopping season (makes it sound like a sport) is the day after Thanksgiving.

If you missed the opening play of consumer gluttony this year, count yourself among the lucky few.

I made the mistake of trying to drop off three rolls of film at Wal-Mart at 10 a.m. the day after Thanksgiving.

Little did I know that Wal-Mart had been open since 6 a.m., and apparently, quite a few people had been there at that ungodly hour.

Words can't describe the horrors. If I ever wanted children, the urge took wing 15 feet into the building.

I believe anyone thinking of having kids should take a walk through a toy store this time of year, then re-examine their feelings on the other side. Don't feel badly if you change your mind; toy stores at Christmas have broken stronger will.

This year, I'm planning on boycotting the more distasteful parts of Christmas. I think I'll bake instead of shop.

If you're on my Christmas-card list, don't start checking the mailbox until after the Dec. 26. The cards are cheaper then.

I plan to be nice to my brother because I have to, but I don't have to mean a word I say, and I'm not caroling for anybody. I don't care who you are.

Actually, the more I think about it, the better hiding out in my house seems.

The plan so far is to drink champagne and watch the "Star Wars" trilogy until I can do Yoda's voice.

By the time it's finished, Darth Vader will be dead, Han Solo will still be a stud and Christmas will be over.

Then I'll go rent a whole bunch of Clint Eastwood movies and settle in for New Year's.

FARRELL IRRESPONSIBILITY

Maybe it's just the end-of-semester stress, maybe I've been here too long or maybe our University does make mistakes once in a while. I know this is a far-out thought.

How could our University make a mistake, or worse yet, why would they try to take our money when they shouldn't? Let me explain the situation.

Since May, I have been receiving overdue notices from Farrell Library. The overdue notices are for six books I checked out about a month ago. After receiving the first notice, the books were promptly returned.

So, what's the problem? The problem is the library tells me I never returned the books. Worse yet, they are hounding me with a bill for $495.

I can't enroll, nor can I get my transcript sent to another school until this bill is taken care of.

The man from the circulation desk recently informed me when I graduate, my wages will be garnished by the state of Kansas if this isn't paid.

I have gone to the dean of student services and even to the dean of the library with my situation.

Furthermore, he said I was stupid enough to mistake a trash can for a book deposit box.

I am completely disgusted with the kind of assistance I have received from the University regarding this problem.

The library didn't take any responsibility for something that was their mistake.

With the library going through the construction it is, there is not a doubt in my mind that they misplaced the books.

When I think about the way I have been treated regarding this situation, it makes me sad to see this is the kind of world we live in — one that does not place any value in the word of others.

Sometimes I feel like I should stop being the kind of person I am — honest and caring — because it gets me nowhere.

The sad reality is that in this world, we are losing the basis of what a society needs to survive and that is a trust in our fellow humans.

I'm still not sure what I am going to do about this, but if anyone has a suggestion, let me know.

Looking ahead,
New year deserves meaningful resolutions

It is time in America to look to the horizon — toward a call that is unique and annually new.

It is a call that will change the scope of views regarding our national conscience and of who we are.

It is a siren that calls through the muddled fog of foreign policy and intrigue about the unresolved budget.

It is the hope of the coming year, and the unknown crest and pitfalls of the great ocean of society.

We stand at this point and time in history as a straggling group of people who are looking at one another, unsure of what will become the model for dominance.

From across the Atlantic Ocean, in torn patches of ground and icy fields, we send troops in an attempt to reinforce the dove of peace with a rifle.

It is a siren of unsure change, unstoppable creation and shaping. Every year, people make their New Year's resolutions with the hope some inward urging and control will change their ways to make them more prosperous.

The wish is always personal, and it is somehow known to be an unwritten contract that is OK to break.

But, just as each of us (but not all of us) make resolutions, we must look at the new changes we have brought to the world and its own resolutions that are unseen on a wide scale.

On an international scale, the Bosnia we send troops to is one that has clarity only on a map, as one country united under treaty — but not in spirit.

Support for troops is vital, but I have as of yet to see the flocking of yellow ribbons to signposts, trees and jacket lapels.

Perhaps we're accepting that

Bosnia is the model for which future wars will be fought, a symbolic flashing of muscle for which the world will remember as strong.

We are told the peace and safety of the world is important. Let us not forget the peace and safety, as well as the insecurity of those liberties, of the men and women who will soon be landing in another country to reinforce a peace that is not our own.

On the national political scene, we have seen the grinding machine of the Republican Revolution slowly come to a hill it might not be able to pass.

Newt Gingrich has shown his true colors, claiming Clinton snubbed him on Air Force One when photographs showed quite the contrary.

Our commander in chief has fought him over the budget while Bob Dole stands thoughtfully behind, weighing the options the battle will have over his candidacy.

With an election year looming, the people and the press are already tired of the bickering that no one has justification in starting yet.

The candidates are already stale. Our faces as Americans are changing. More and more immigrants come to America, adding mouths to the table that are not fed at the table but under it.

We were raised to the conscious of a population when hundreds of thousands of African American men converged on Washington, D.C. in a march of peace and redemption under one man's banner that did not equal the two qualities all those men stood for under the national eye.

Our actions as citizens are the resolutions we make for the country. When we vote, when we choose various areas of society and when we choose certain paths, we open and close the avenues of our neighbors. These are resolutions that are not broken.

We don't think in minute steps — only great ones.

We appreciate moments that are momentous, but not the ones that are small. Sometimes, the big decisions aren't the ones that are important.

And in the coming year, where events are yet unseen, the small steps are the ones that are going to count.

Kansas racetracks arrange greyhound adoptions

stories by sara smith

Instead of betting on greyhounds, people are taking them home.

Because of a surge of interest in both the sport and the breed, many racing greyhounds are being placed with private owners after their racing days are over.

But it's not the same thing as going to the pound and picking up a puppy. Greyhounds require a commitment.

"We feel that not everybody who wants a greyhound is qualified to be an owner," said Cher Oliver, director of Regap, or Retired Greyhounds as Pets.

Regap is only one of many independent adoption agencies, but retired greyhounds can be adopted directly from racetracks as well. The Woodlands in Kansas City, Kan., and the Wichita Greyhound Park both have adoption services. The Wichita track placed 336 dogs in homes in 1994, and it hopes to meet its goal of 364 by the end of the year, said Karen Gillam, assistant in the adoption department.

"We usually have 24 to choose from at all times. That includes males and females and all sizes and colors," Gillam said.

Gillam said the Wichita track makes a real effort to place the dogs in the right homes, right down to having the dogs' everyday handlers consult potential owners when they visit the track.

"We're able to tell them a little bit about each dog so they can match the right one," she said.

Dr. Rob Gillette, a veterinarian who has specialized in greyhounds for nine years, said it was important to consider the dispositions of individual greyhounds and potential owners.

"The good adoption groups will match greyhound types or personalities with families who will suit them," Gillette said. "The Woodlands and the Wichita track are real good at that."

Gillette said greyhounds make great pets because of the way they interact with people and adapt to different environments.

"They're a very socialized breed. They're very personable and make for a great pet/owner bond," he said. "A greyhound can fit into any environment, really, depending on the dog."

"We adopted out a greyhound that was better on a farm. Then there are also greyhounds that can live in an apartment."

Gillette said many greyhounds are retired from racing because of injury, but he said the injuries that halt a racing career would be barely noticeable off the track, where success is measured by hundredths of a second.

"It wouldn't prevent them from being a pet at all," Gillette said.

"It's not going to bother an adopted greyhound who's been injured to walk around the house. But it will slow them down. If they're slowed down a second or a half a second, then they might not be able to race anymore."

Gillette, who is the president-elect of the American Canine Sports Medicine Association, also said he didn't think greyhounds should ever be placed in an adoptive home before full recovery from an injury.

"I never like to let a greyhound be adopted out that is injured because it puts an extra strain on the owner," he said.

Putting in an application to adopt a greyhound usually requires filling out a form, making a visit to choose a dog, and a follow-up visit to make sure the right conditions exist for the dog.

Gillam said the right conditions for a greyhound involved a controlled environment because greyhounds are sight hounds, which means they will run after a rabbit, for example, and not be able to come back.

"Most would not be able to find their way home. If they can't see it, they can't find it," Gillam said.

Because of this, a fenced-in yard is a necessity for anyone who wants to adopt a greyhound from anywhere. Also, greyhounds don't deal as well with cold weather as other breeds do because they have little coat and body fat.

"They are indoor dogs. They would have to be indoors," Gillam said.

Gillam said she wouldn't rule out college students owning greyhounds as long as they had the time and space to handle it.

"Just so long as they understand the responsibility involved. With love, I'm sure it would be fine," she said.

Oliver agreed.

"I wouldn't rule that out, by any means. We do look for somebody that has a lot of stability in their lives," she said. "They do hate being alone. They've never been alone in their lives."

Regap looks at a potential owner's history to see how they've cared for pets in the past.

"If we see someone whose had 10 pets in the last 10 years, then we really question their commitment to have a pet for the rest of their lives," Oliver said.

Gillam said once a greyhound is placed, the dog fits in quickly.

"They adjust very quickly to being in a household. Usually, within two or three days, they're fully adjusted after never having seen a household before," she said.

An adult male greyhound can weigh up to 90 pounds and stand 45 inches at the shoulder. Its body is a machine of delicate bone and powerful muscle. In sprints, greyhounds are the 10th fastest animals in the world.

They are also gentle, loving and affectionate.

"The greyhound is an excellent all-around pet. They just happen to be the fastest dog in the world," Gillette said.

Gillette said it was amazing that such powerful animals were such good pets.

"The fastest animal in the world is the cheetah, but you wouldn't allow a cheetah in your home," he said.

Gillette, who has worked as both as racetrack veterinarian and a racing judge at the Woodlands, said there were misconceptions about both the breed and the racing environment.

Until recently, most people had seen greyhounds only at the track, where gambling rules dictate that they wear muzzles.

"Greyhounds are always seen with muzzles, so people have a perception that they're aggressive or they will bite," Gillette said.

"I've never seen a greyhound actually get into a fight on the track. The muzzle is more for the laws of gambling."

The greyhounds wear muzzles to help determine the winner, not to keep them from biting. The front of the muzzle is white, and in a close race, it allows the track to determine which dog actually won the race.

Gillette said that although he is aware animal-rights movements are opposed to racing, he thinks some people have the wrong idea about how racing greyhounds are raised.

"They're treated like kings and queens. They're fed meat that other dogs wouldn't get. They're very pampered, or you wouldn't get a good performance out of them," he said.

Gillam said she agreed.

"They're not abused. Well, I can speak for the ones here. The bottom line is that if the dogs aren't happy, they're not going to run," she said.

Gillam said the racing environment helped greyhounds become good pets later.

"They're so friendly to everyone because they've been handled by so many different people all their lives. They don't know what a stranger is."

But Oliver, whose adoption agency is not affiliated with racing, said many greyhounds don't even get to race.

"A lot of the dogs we deal with never made it to the track," she said. "Hundreds of thousands of dogs are bred each year that never make it to the track. And those dogs are destroyed or used for research."

Gillette said he could see both sides of the issue — from animal rights to a racetrack's perspective.

"They have a point because they want humane treatment of animals, so they've got to blow their side out of proportion. The racing people have to protect their interests, so they'll make their point real strongly. So you end up with two polarized sides," he said.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL TEAM TAKES ON OHIO

The K-State women's basketball team returns home for a showdown at 7 tonight against Ohio University in Bramlage Coliseum. Students get in free with their ID.

What to expect for the Holiday

It's K-State's favorite season of the year — bowling season.

And the Wildcats are making their third bowl trip in as many years. So how does the team look heading into the Holiday Bowl against Colorado State?

Just fine, thank you.

Before I continue to tell my readers why, let me get something out of the way. Do not worry about Boston College Syndrome. Forget what happened in last year's Aloha Bowl. It won't happen again.

The Cats should be able to run their mouths all they want and still have no reason to lose to unimpressive Colorado State.

I say this because I look for a big game out of the Cats' three most important players.

Quarterback Matt Miller has much to prove in this game after a sluggish performance in the regular-season finale loss to Colorado.

Miller needs to show why he was a second-team all-Big 8 selection and will come out to do just that.

Look for more than 350 yards of total offense and a handful of touchdowns from Miller because he has nothing to lose and everything to gain in the last game of his college career.

Wide receiver Kevin Lockett will be the main beneficiary of Miller's Redemption Tour.

Miller likes to make Lockett his first read on passes and usually — if Lockett is open — throws it to him. There is no reason for Lockett not to be open against the weak secondary of the Rams.

Where Lockett could make the game interesting is on the short crossing patterns Miller and Lockett have become accustomed to. Don't be surprised to see Lockett break one of those after the catch for a big gain.

And the last of the three Cats to look for a big game from is cornerback Chris Canty.

Simply put, he is the most talented player in a Wildcat uniform. He has been the most consistent member of the defense and has made big play after big play happen all by himself — and I don't think a wide receiver has truly beaten Canty all season.

Let's hope Canty brings out the high purple socks for the Holiday Bowl and look for him to start his talking on the field on the first play of the game.

Sometime in the game, an ignorant Ram quarterback will test Canty — and get burned.

Mark this down, Canty will have an interception — or two or more, in the game.

But K-State fans can't fool themselves by just looking at those three; it really goes deeper than that.

Defensive tackle Tim Colston, linebacker Percell Gaskins, safety Chuck Marlowe and wide receivers Tyson Schwieger and Mitch Running all want to have a big last-college game and maybe turn the heads of a few NFL scouts at the same time.

There are just too many weapons on this team. And this team is way too talented and way too ready to have a big game against Colorado State. This team has come way too far to have another Boston College this bowling season.

Without hometown bias — K-State 45, Colorado State 6.

K-State back home to face Ohio Bobcats

Dan Lowerenz

sports editor

After playing its last three games on the road, the K-State women's basketball team returns to the friendly confines of Bramlage Coliseum tonight to take on the Bobcats of Ohio University.

Tipoff is at 7 p.m., and students are admitted free with a valid K-State ID.

Wildcat coach Brian Agler said the Bobcats would be a solid opponent.

"I think they will bring a team with a lot of experience," Agler said. "They bring back three starters from a team that won the (Mid-American Conference) last year and played in the NCAA tournament."

Leading the way for the Bobcats is 5-foot, 11-inch forward Molly Sito, who averaged 15.3 points and 5.4 rebounds per game last season.

"Sito is a real presence in the post for them," Agler said.

The Bobcat backcourt returns intact, with starters Natalie Britt (9.6 points per game) and Kim Van Kennel (6.2 points per game) returning to the lineup.

"Van Kennel is a very steady and solid guard for them. She handles the ball really well," Agler said.

K-State (4-1) returns home led by sophomore wing Brit Jacobson and junior post Andria Jones. Jacobson is averaging 15.8 points and 5.4 rebounds per game, and Jones has tallied 15.4 points and 5.8 boards per game.

Junior wing Missy Decker is also averaging in double figures, with 11 points per game on 50-percent shooting from behind the three-point arc. Starters Amanda Chamberlain and Carrie Ragar average 3.8 and 3.6 points respectively, and Chamberlain leads the team in assists with 3.6 per game.

After a disappointing loss at Memphis last weekend, Agler said the Cats would need to focus on playing their game if they're going to beat Ohio.

"We didn't play too bad against Memphis," Agler said. "But there were some things I was not pleased with. We need to improve our post defense, and our offensive execution has to get better."

Agler said the return home would help the Cats.

"At least, I hope it will."

NU's Phillips receives probation, fine

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska running back Lawrence Phillips was sentenced to one year of probation Tuesday, 11 weeks after he beat a former girlfriend and was suspended from the team. He will be available for the Fiesta Bowl.

Phillips also was ordered by Lancaster County Judge Jack Lindner to attend a domestic violence prevention class and pay $359 in restitution. He still is barred from contact with Nebraska basketball player Kate McEwen, whom he attacked Sept. 10.

Phillips, accompanied by attorney Hal Anderson, declined to comment after the sentencing and later at the school's athletic offices.

"I don't know what's fair and what's not fair," coach Tom Osborne said of the sentence. "I know that he'll comply, and I feel very good about what Lawrence has done to this point. He's done what he's been asked to do — whatever the court says, that's what he'll do."

Police said Phillips broke into the apartment of transfer quarterback Scott Frost and attacked McEwen with his hands. Frost and another man managed to get Phillips away from McEwen after she had been dragged down a flight of stairs.

McEwen was treated at a hospital and released. McEwen, who has returned to school, requested and received 24-hour protection paid for by the university. School police could not confirm Tuesday whether the protection was continuing.

The incident destroyed the Heisman Trophy hopes of Phillips, who ran for 359 yards and seven touchdowns in Nebraska's first two games.

Osborne dismissed Phillips from the team the day of the assault but later called it an indefinite suspension. Phillips rejoined the team Oct. 24.

Osborne has been criticized for not dismissing Phillips from the No. 1 Cornhuskers, who play No. 2 Florida for the national championship in the Fiesta Bowl on Jan. 2 in Tempe, Ariz.

Osborne has said Phillips is better off playing football because of its structure and discipline. Phillips, who pleaded no contest and was found guilty of misdemeanor assault and trespassing, attends anger-control counseling and sees a psychologist two to three times per week.

Of the restitution, $248 will go to McEwen for medical expenses. The remaining $111 will pay for damage caused to the apartment building where the assault happened.

Phillips' probation will expire Nov. 29. He could face 30 days in jail, but the judge and Anderson said that would be waived if probation was completed successfully.

Osborne said Phillips has been punished enough. He said Phillips could have been a top five pick in the upcoming professional draft but lost out on a big signing bonus after missing six games.

"Some people feel like we didn't do anything to him," Osborne said. "But I imagine by suspending him I took several million dollars away from Lawrence Phillips — he's paid a price."

Phillips has declined to say whether he will return for his senior season.

City needs students to coach kids

Rich Pefley

staff reporter

The Manhattan Recreation Services is looking for youth sports coaches for basketball.

Recreational Services operates two leagues for boys and girls in two age groups. Fifth- and sixth-grader students compete in one league, and seventh- and eighth-grader students compete in the other. Thirty boys teams and 30 girls teams compete in both leagues.

Mike Buchanan, director of Recreational Services, said there are a few basic things the Rec Complex looks for in a coach.

"You have to like kids, obviously," Buchanan said. "You have to know a little bit about basketball and you must be committed."

"The more they know about basketball, the better, and the time commitment is not real extensive," Buchanan said. "We just don't want someone who's going to do a half-way job. Plus, it looks good on a résumé to volunteer for your community."

The teams practice twice a week, and all teams play on Sunday, with the exception of the younger boys, who play on Saturday. Each team plays one game a week for eight weeks.

Practice will start the week of January 15 with the first game to be played that weekend.

An organizational meeting is scheduled for this Sunday at 2 p.m. It will be at the fire station headquarters on the corner of Denison and Kimball avenues.

Buchanan said the meeting would consist of coaches receiving league information, rosters, schedules and rules.

"We will basically cover all the details at this meeting," Buchanan said.

Jordan's offense is spark for Bulls' winning ways

■ Dennis Rodman overshadowed by Jordan

Associated Press

DEERFIELD, Ill. — Dennis Rodman was supposed to bring toughness and rebounding to the Chicago Bulls. He hasn't, but it hasn't mattered.

Even without the injured Rodman and even with the team not playing particularly well during a seven-game road trip, the Bulls have put together the NBA's best record, 13-2.

The catalyst has been — who else? — Michael Jordan.

"There are some nights when my offensive output has really given the team a lift," Jordan said Tuesday, the day before the Bulls' first home game in almost three weeks. "But that's the purpose of a team, isn't it? On days when some people don't produce, others have to step up. I would not say I was winning those games by myself."

There's stepping up, and then there's stepping up.

Jordan, well on the way to his eighth NBA scoring title, averaged 33 points during the 6-1 road swing. The trip's highlight was at Vancouver against the expansion Grizzlies, when Jordan scored 19 points in the final 6 minutes to turn an eight-point deficit into a pull-away victory.

It was vintage Jordan, who saved the Bulls on many occasions during the 1991, 1992 and 1993 championship runs. He has been much more consistently spectacular than he was last season, when he often looked rusty after ending his 17-month retirement.

"Save the team? I don't know about that," Jordan said. "Just to be able to give the team a lift — it's fun to know I can still do that. But the ideal situation is not to have those situations evolve."

Despite their lofty status in the standings, the Bulls go into today's game against the New York Knicks unhappy with how they are playing.

"Michael and Scottie (Pippen) have been carrying us," backup guard Steve Kerr said. "Every once in a while, someone else has a good game, but we've got to be better. We're not even close to being consistent off the bench. Toni (Kukoc) and I need to get going."

The Bulls are so worried about their interior defense and rebounding that they have been talking to center Sam Bowie, who retired after playing with the Los Angeles Lakers last season.

Much of that defense and rebounding was expected to come from Rodman, who was acquired from San Antonio in October but hasn't played since he strained a calf muscle in the third regular-season game.

He said his chances of playing today were "50-50 at best," and indicated that he more likely would return two nights later against San Antonio.

Though he practiced at almost full speed Tuesday, Rodman still hasn't given the thumbs-up to coach Phil Jackson, who said he isn't worried about the enigmatic forward's reluctance to return to action.

"It's just Dennis. You don't get troubled by what happens with Dennis," Jackson said. "At this point, I'm not sure he knows when he's going to be ready. If he says, 'I'm just not in shape to play with the kind of energy I have to have on the court,' that's understandable."

During Rodman's convalescence, he again changed hair colors — now it's lime green. He also appeared nude in Playboy magazine; in the accompanying article, he said: "I bring excitement. Michael Jordan used to do that. Now it's the Dennis Rodman show."

Not quite. Jordan never needed that kind of, um, exposure to prove his uniqueness.

During the road trip, Jordan delivered plenty of excitement to sold-out arenas. He also delivered victories on the court. And even though he repeatedly had to bail out the Bulls, Jordan didn't echo his teammates' concern about the level of Chicago's play.

"We were 6-1 for a reason — we found ways to win," he said. "There are no perfect ways to win. Even some of the championship teams I was on, we won ugly. We won because we scrapped and found a way."

Santa truth revealed: Rosy-cheeked man is fat, selfish bastard

If you thought those door-to-door juvenile candy extortionists from Halloween were bad, clue in to the immorality of this time of year.

There's a white male who has been running a slave operation outside of international jurisdiction for years now, and it's about time to blow his cover.

He's known as St. Nicholas (no one seems to know his full name) but also goes by the aliases Santa Claus, St. Nick, Santa and even "Santy."

For years, this Santa character has been living isolated at the North Pole in international territory, beyond the jurisdiction of Canada, Russia, Sweden, the United States and other nearby nations where this slavery can go on unhindered.

The method of operation Santa employs is to kidnap midgets from around the world and enslave them into making Christmas gifts. At the remote North Pole, the midgets have nowhere to escape to and no contact with the outside world.

They are forced to work all year long making gifts. After they are finished, Santa goes around the world at Christmas, invading international airspace and endangering air traffic, to distribute the gifts.

Some people believe Santa is some selfless old soul who goes around making children's lives brighter. Don't be fooled.

Santa has a severe weight problem brought on by gluttony and, it's rumored, excessive drinking during the long polar nights. In order to support his habit, Santa uses the illusion of generosity and cheer to land roles in the many high-paying TV commercials he's in during the holiday season.

With the proceeds from these commercial ads, Santa lives, eats and drinks in comfort and excess while the midget slaves who manufacture the gifts that make him so popular toil in agony.

With all the changes in the world economy, Santa has also taken to exploiting the people of the Pacific rim in manufacturing cheaper clothes and electronics, perennial favorite gifts at this time of year, for pennies an hour. Thanks to the "Santa Clause," a free-trade provision buried in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), Santa gets the goods — minus export duties.

Santa's exploitation doesn't stop with midgets and the Third World. His co-dependent wife, the prime enabler of his addictive behaviors, toils to feed and take care of Santa with little or no credit from the outside world. Santa never gives this hard-working woman the credit she, like any homemaker, deserves.

Santa is also cruel to animals. He forces rare northern reindeer to carry his ill-gotten gifts around the world to children.

Finally, the saddest part about Santa's operation is his racist and classist choices in gift distribution. While children of color from the inner cities and poor rural children receive little if anything from him, Santa always seems to load middle- and upper-class white children down with almost too many gifts. Of course, these classes patronize the numerous sponsors of Santa commercials. Santa kisses the hand that overfeeds him.

Merry Christmas?

SECURITY

"Don't do bad things," he said, "and second, don't trust people to keep things secret for you if you do. If you follow the first rule, you won't have to worry about the second one."

Although system administrators have the ability to open up files in user accounts, Bucher said such activity is illegal and unethical when done simply just to spy on someone.

He said that although the possibility exists that system administrators could abuse their powers just as postal and telephone employees could in their respective fields, the sheer volume of traffic on the Internet deters this from happening.

The Web is a growing medium of commerce, which often involves the exchange of names, addresses, telephone numbers and credit card information.

There is no guarantee that whoever receives the data is a legitimate business or someone can't intercept the data, Bucher said.

The vast majority of Internet business transactions are probably legitimate, Bucher said.

He said he takes personal comfort in knowing his bank, like many others, only hold credit-card users liable for a limited amount of fraudulent transactions.

"I don't worry about this a whole lot," he said.

Bucher's rule of thumb about preventing embarrassing material from coming back to haunt users later is they should never send any message that they wouldn't want on the front page of the local newspaper.

Beth Unger, vice provost of academic research and technology and ex officio member of the University's Data Administration Task Force, said the task force was concentrating on ways to make official University data more secure.

"The task force is looking into keeping student records, human-resource records and that sort of thing free from interference from the network," she said.

The task force will set up guidelines and policies for administering official data, she said.

"The main focus in addition to making sure that it remains confidential is creating ways of administering it properly," Unger said.

"Don't do bad things. And second, don't trust people to keep things secret for you if you do. If you follow the first rule, you won't have to worry about the second one."

JOHN BUCHER
DIRECTOR OF COMPUTING AND NETWORK SERVICES

An example of this new administration scheme would be having all student addresses kept, maintained and secured on one campus server rather than scattered around campus in various media, she said.

"Then we have to decide what kind of administrative structures are needed to implement these policies and strategies," Unger said.

"The University might have to reassign some of the campus' employees, in accordance with their job descriptions, to implement these policies," she said.

After the task force develops and implements these strategies, Unger said she believed the task force would look into helping students and other individual users on the campus network keep their accounts secure.

Letter evokes change at Bramlage

Nikola Zytkow
staff writer

A letter to the editor about the inaccessibility of Bramlage Coliseum at graduation services prompted a series of calls to the administration.

Hours after Victoria Battle's letter appeared in Tuesday's K-State Collegian, University administrators apologized for the misunderstanding and offered to make accommodations for Battle's relative, as well as anyone with access problems.

The letter, signed by Battle, senior in English and pre-law, and her sister Laura, senior in dietetics, described how she and her sister were appalled when someone on the Bramlage staff told her that her uncle, who has problems walking up steps, would have to watch the ceremony on a TV screen from a box at the Coliseum.

Battle was told in what she described as an "I-could-care-less-attitude" that the elevators at Bramlage would not be accessible at graduation ceremonies, because graduating seniors would be blocking them.

"It made us feel bad to have to tell my uncle that he wasn't going to be able to attend our graduation," Battle said, adding that her uncle was coming from California to see her and her sister graduate.

"We were sure he wasn't going to be the only one to have this problem," Battle said.

After reading the letter, secretaries in the English department, where Battle works part time, called many places on campus to find out about the policy.

Jane Rowlett, director of unclassified affairs, also read the letter.

"The president's office was concerned that the family was properly accommodated, so I looked into it," Rowlett said.

She said she does not want to speculate as to the events that transpired. She said Bramlage has always tried to accommodate everyone — this year's graduation should be no exception.

An area around the elevators will be roped off to assure access to anyone needing special accommodations during the graduating ceremonies, Rowlett said.

Court-level seating as well as concourse-level seating will be available for all participants who might find access difficult.

Charles Thomas, director of Bramlage, said the misunderstanding probably occurred because of a change in seating policy.

In the past, the information that Battle was told was accurate Bramlage policy.

"It was a totally different set up. The concourse and the tunnel were full," Thomas said. He said because of a change in how commencement is organized accommodations are possible for whoever needs them.

"Thomas and the Bramlage staff have gone out of their way to make sure people get the seating that they need," Rowlett said. "I was really sorry that this had all occurred."

Battle said she is glad she wrote the letter because it brought a potential problem to the attention of the University.

"Everybody just rallied around and came up with the solution," Battle said. "It wasn't that the University did not care. It was just that one person on the phone."

► ARSON CHARGES REDUCED

The aggravated arson charges filed against two K-State students have been reduced.

Timothy James Maxwell and James Kirby Bunch admitted to starting a fire in Marlatt Hall. They were arrested by K-State Police on charges of aggravated arson. The students were released on $2,000 bond.

K-State Police investigator Richard Herrman said the charge has been changed to criminal damage to property.

The charges were changed because the damage was less than $500, Herrman said. Criminal damage to property is a misdemeanor.

Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said the state would still get adequate compensation from the men with the lesser charge.

Kennedy said there were several fires indicated in the police report. However, the criminal damage to property only applies to one incident. The two men allegedly set a paper sign on a door. For the rest of the fires, Kennedy wasn't satisfied that he could connect them to the students.

Kennedy said he hopes this will be a growing up-experience for the men.

Damage from the fires totaled $100.

► CITY COMMISSION

City to keep quorum

Jamie Wiley
staff reporter

The following city commission meeting did not finish until after press time Tuesday night.

The city commission voted to approve several contracts and decided against increasing its quorum from three to four.

The commissioners voted to approve unchanged contracts from the Historical Society, the Civic Theater and the Arts Council by unanimous votes Tuesday night.

The contract between the city and the Chamber of Commerce for the Convention and Visitors Bureau was approved by 4-0-1 vote with Commissioner Steve Hall abstaining from voting on the contract.

Hall said he did not receive enough information about where the taxpayer's money was going to vote in favor of the contract.

Hall introduced an amendment to the contract that would make the CVB report to the city each month what they have accomplished and what projects the bureau has undertaken. The amendment lost by a 2-3 vote.

"I would like a specific list of what the CVB brought to Manhattan," Hall said.

The only change in the 1996 contract is that the CVB will now have to report to the commission on progress in March and September.

Under the contract, the CVB will receive any money that is brought in by the transient guest tax after the municipal airport receives $72,000 from the tax revenue.

The CVB will receive no more than $347,105 in 1996 and will receive any extra money generated by the guest tax in January 1997.

The $72,000 that will go toward the airport is a 3-percent increase in what the airport has been receiving each year. Hall said the 3-percent increase was to reduce the cost of the terminal building at the airport.

John Pence, chairman of CVB steering committee, said the CVB is doing more for the city than just providing a transient guest tax. He said the bureau is attracting people into Manhattan who spend the night and spend a lot of money in Manhattan stores.

Bridge support

Fort Riley soldiers may be deployed

Nicole Kirby
staff reporter

If the United States decides to deploy troops to Bosnia, one group of soldiers at Fort Riley might be called upon to help.

Although the 55th Engineer Company is not on alert, it was identified as one of the support units that might be asked to go to Bosnia.

"They have been told to prepare for possible deployment," Deb Skidmore, public information officer, said.

The 55th Engineer Company, a medium girder bridge company, is made up of 110 soldiers who build bridges that can support the tanks the U.S. Army uses in combat.

There are no bridges in Bosnia that can support these tanks, and many of the bridges in the populated areas have been bombed, John Stauter, public affairs officer, said.

"Having been in the area myself, I think you can rest assured that it is a hilly area with a lot of gulches," he said.

The services of this company might be required to help get troops in and out of Bosnia.

"We want to be able to get them back out. That's why they're sending a lot of support units like this one," Jarrod Krull, public affairs officer, said.

If the company is sent to help with the peace-keeping effort, they will not know when they will be needed.

"A certain unit could go six months from now or three months from now," Krull said.

The company is spending this week on refreshing its bridge-making and defense skills in case it is called upon to go to Bosnia.

"What we're doing is giving them a refresher course on stuff they already know, and it's based on what we learned during Peacekeeper '95," said Jennifer Gwinn, who was in charge of the training.

Peacekeeper '95 was a training exercise conducted earlier this fall at Fort Riley in which troops from the United States and Russia participated.

The troops participated in a simulated joint peace-keeping mission.

"They're learning skills that they need to stay alive," Krull said.

Although the members of the company do not know for sure that they will be sent to Bosnia, the army is preparing them and their families for the possibility.

"They have a lot of agencies on post that are set up to help the families," Krull said.

Senate delays deployment debate a week

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A bid by Senate leaders to back the Bosnian troop deployment is running into rank-and-file resistance as members worry the Balkan war will reignite once U.S. troops leave.

The Senate postponed until next week a debate that had been expected to begin today on the deployment of 20,000 U.S. peacekeepers to Bosnia. President Clinton, after gaining the backing of three former presidents this week, sent top military and diplomatic officials to Capitol Hill to give testimony today to try to keep the momentum behind the deployment from flagging.

Emerging from a classified briefing Tuesday with lawmakers, U.S. special envoy Richard Holbrooke said he would regret congressional defeat of a resolution backing the mission. But he said, "The administration policy is clear, and we're going to go ahead."

Clinton runs out of ink while vetoing budget

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — His jaw set, his shoulders squared, President Clinton reached across his Oval Office desk Wednesday for an historic and symbolic pen to veto the Republican budget bill.

But his first attempt at writing his signature produced only scratches.

The pen, used 30 years ago by President Lyndon B. Johnson to sign the legislation that created the Medicare and Medicaid health care programs, was bone dry.

The president raised his head and asked, "Can you bring me some more ink, boys?"

The president intended to use the Johnson pen to symbolize his strong objections to an extreme Republican budget. He said it would reduce the scope of the Medicare and Medicaid programs by an unacceptable $433 billion over the next seven years.

The pen, embossed with the words "The President — The White House" was originally wielded by Johnson on July 30, 1965, at a ceremony at the Harry S. Truman Library in Independence, Mo. The president used it to sign the Social Security Act Amendments of 1965 which created Medicare and Medicaid.

The White House had the pen shipped by Federal Express from the LBJ Library at Austin, Texas.

"We will return it dutifully, and we thank them for allowing us to borrow said pen," Mike McCurry, White House press secretary, said.

After the veto ceremony was concluded, the White House staff passed out copies of a 50-page document outlining 82 separate reasons that prompted the president to kill what he called the extreme Republican budget.

They ranged from reason one — the $433 billion reduction in the scope of Medicare and Medicaid — to reason 82, cuts in the export-enhancement program.

DB92 TURNS 45, CELEBRATES BY GIVING AWAY CDs, CASH PRIZES

KSDB-FM 91.9 turned 45 years old this year and sponsored a trivia contest with a grand prize giveaway.

"I guess I won," Mark Vacca, graduate student in biology, said. "They pulled my name out of a hat or whatever."

As the grand-prize winner, Vacca received 45 compact discs of the station's choice, and $45.

Vacca correctly answered the question: "Who is the founding member of the band Sugar and former lead guitarist of Hüsker Dü?"

"I've never won anything," he said. "If I ever listen to the radio, there's only a couple of programs I like."

Robyn Horton, assistant promotions director, said the contesttants would continue to call in and guess answers if they got the answer wrong the first time.

Some of the questions were general ones about the station's history, or name three bands with Super in them," Horton said. And "who were the three blonde bimbos in 'Three's Company'?"

FARRELL BUILDING MANAGER LEAVES; CONSTRUCTION ON SCHEDULE

Farrell Library is searching for a new building manager.

In the midst of construction, Lynn Cowley, the previous building manager, left when her husband, who is in the military, was transferred.

"We are in the process of interviewing people for the position," Pam Sexton, library assistant II, said. "We hope to have someone on board by the end of the month if that's possible."

In the meantime, other people will take over the building manager's responsibilities, Sexton said.

"I don't think the absence of a building manager will set back construction," Sexton said.

The library was scheduled to move the current main entrance to a new location at semester break, but the move will be delayed until spring break or the end of spring semester to cause less distraction for students, Sexton said.

"They want to get some things done on the west side. They don't want to change the entrance until all that's ready," Sexton said.

Construction is on or ahead of schedule, and is still scheduled to be completed by February 1997, Sexton said.

CLINTON MAKES BUDGET PLANS

WASHINGTON (AP) — According to a GOP demand, President Clinton is preparing a seven-year plan for balancing the budget, the first sign of movement in the week-old budget talks and one that is receiving a guarded welcome from Republicans.

Clinton is likely to suggest smaller tax cuts and more savings from welfare, corporate tax loopholes and other programs than he proposed six months ago, as well as smaller spending boosts for many domestic programs, according to an administration official and a congressional source who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

GOP negotiators have demanded a detailed seven-year proposal, and until now Democrats had insisted on working from a broad-brush, 10-year budget-balancing outline Clinton presented in June.

"We are in the process of preparing a seven-year plan," White House chief of staff Leon Panetta told reporters Tuesday. "As you know, this isn't an easy process."

2 KILLED IN BUS ACCIDENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A malfunctioning hydraulic trash compactor blasted through the side of a garbage truck Wednesday and ripped open the side of a passing school bus, killing two children.

A third child was hospitalized in critical condition.

A 12-foot arm that pushes a ram to compact trash inside the truck punched through the side of the vehicle with a force of 1,500 pounds per square inch, said Roland Silva, spokesman for the city Department of Sanitation.

"It was like a missile coming out of a launch pad," Silva said.

The arm projecting from the side of the truck then raked the left side of the oncoming bus, smashing windows and bending frame posts, said Officer Rhett Price of the California Highway Patrol.

"We've never had something like this happen to one of our trucks," Silva said. "It was a very freakish thing."

Truck driver Kenneth Fox, 28, was distraught.

"He was crying because he saw the babies on the street," said a witness, Juan Francisco.

*If you wouldn't give your money away to just anyone, would you? Neither can we. Offers expire January 15, 1996. No payment of principal or interest will be required for 90 days. Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to the principal and will bear interest which will be included in the repayment schedule. The monthly payment quoted above is an estimate based on a total loan amount of $1,435.11, which includes a sample purchase price of $1,349 for the Performa 631CD system shown above. The total loan amount also includes a 6.0% loan origination fee. Interest is variable based on the Commercial Paper Rate plus a spread of 0.35%. For example, the month of October 1995 had an interest rate of 12.17% with an annual percentage rate (APR) of 13.95%. Monthly payments for the total loan amount described above would be $24.64. Monthly payment and APR shown assumes no deferral of principal and does not include state or local sales tax. Monthly payments may vary depending on actual computer system prices, total loan amounts, state and local sales taxes, and a change in the monthly variable interest rate. Prequalification expedites the loan process, but does not guarantee final loan approval. Subsequent acceptable verification documents must be received before your loan is approved. Ahearn Field House gymnasium roared Wednesday night as the Alpha Kappa Alpha's first women's volleyball tournament took place.

About 100 people attended the tournament, which was a part of the Black Love Week celebration. AKA, Delta Sigma Theta, Zeta Phi Beta and the Black Student Union participated in the event.

"We're hoping to make it an annual event," Shanta Snell, senior in elementary education, said. "And maybe next year we'll open it to fraternities."

Steven Duren, senior in art and graphic design, was volunteering to do some line judging.

"They came to do something productive," he said.

"Instead of back-stabbing one another."

Philip Betts, junior in interior architecture, said the almost 40 men attending were there to back up the women by judging, refereeing, score keeping or supporting.

The teams supported each another by shouting, cheering, laughing, shaking hands and congratulating each other.

"I've been getting pretty good vibes from all the activities this week," Betts said. "The spirit is definitely here."

There were a few glitches that will have to be worked out for next year, Snell said, like no exceptions to the rules.

"The hardest part this year was getting people to participate in the actual volleyball game," she said.

Ten children from the Douglas Center also watched the games.

"We car pooled kids over to watch the games," Carla Rose, sophomore, undecided, said.

Everyone attending the games was required to donate a canned food item at the door.

Plans definite for summer renovation

James Dierking

Manhattan High School will get a more than $1.3-million facelift this summer.

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Board of Education heard a preliminary report on the project at its regular meeting Monday night.

The project will include remodeling of the science, home economics and drama labs.

"These are basically going to look like new labs when we're done," Kirk Horner, architect, said.

Improvements will be made and new equipment will be added to the kitchen and locker room areas.

An air conditioning project that was started earlier this year will be completed as part of this project.

Air conditioning will be added to the gymnasium and locker room areas.

"By the time we're done, almost 95 percent of the high school should be air conditioned," Horner said.

Board members were supportive of the improvements, especially in the science and locker room areas.

"We felt real strong, especially in the chemical labs where students are working with chemicals, that a bigger space and work setting were needed," Dan Yunk, superintendent, said.

The board also accepted a $13,466 Goals 2000 state grant for programs.

The grant will be used for implementation of a leadership team and quality performance accreditation.

QPA allows schools to evaluate how much their students have learned.

In other business, almost $11,000 of surplus and obsolete equipment was sold at an auction Nov. 29, Associate Superintendent Dave Mickey, said.

Eight school buses were sold at an average of $925 per bus.

"It was a little lower than what we were selling the busses for, but now they're all gone," Mickey said. "The sale was a success."

The final meeting of the year has been changed to 4 p.m. Dec. 20 at the Robinson Education Center.

Marshall scholarship winner to study in Great Britain

Chris Oakley
staff reporter

Brian Hesse, senior in political science, history and international studies, is K-State's newest Marshall scholarship winner, Nancy Twiss, special assistant to the Provost for scholarships, said.

"I am a bit in awe at the moment," Hesse said. "I am very excited."

Hesse learned he was chosen to be a Marshall Scholarship Tuesday.

Marshall scholars receive between $40,000 to $60,000 for two years of study at any university in Great Britain.

Hesse said he plans to attend the London School of Economics at the University of London, and work toward a Master's Degree of Philosophy in International Relations.

"I want to go into either foreign service or work for some international organization dealing with human rights," Hesse said.

The selection process is two-tiered, Hesse said.

Universities nominate students who send an application and essay to a regional office. The regional office then decides whether or not to grant an interview.

Of the twenty people interviewed from the region, four or five names are sent to the British Ambassador to the United States who makes the final decision, Hesse said.

Hesse is the seventh K-State student in the past six years to win a Marshall scholarship. K-State has had

Audubon encourages activism

Becky Klenk

The Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society urged Manhattan residents and students Thursday night to actively petition local, state and national officials about environmental concerns.

Members discussed the proposed

Victory dredging site on an old landfill in the Kansas River northwest of Lawrence.

The Audubon Society has been heavily campaigning against the proposed dredging for the past two months, because the dredging could effect the water supply in Lawrence by disturbing high levels of herbicides and pesticides already found in the water.

The dredging could also affect those who canoe along the river because of equipment used during dredging.

The proposed nature-based park in the Manhattan Northview area was also discussed. Members of a city parks commission have endorsed the plan, which calls for hiking and nature trails.

Audubon Society members were urged to write Manhattan city commissioners and encourage them to find a way to purchase the land under consideration.

"This is a wonderful plan, and we want the commission to know we support it," said Chris Cokinos, Audubon Society member and instructor of English.

bowled over? WILDCATS GO SAN DIEGO

The tickets were expensive. Mom and Dad wanted you home over the holidays. The airlines were booked. Traveling 2,000 miles and eating 6 billion Stuckey's pecan logs would be way too much on your system. You still wanted to be there, though. It's OK, you bought the book. Three photographers and in-depth articles covered the Holiday bowl experience for you. You can sit back and re-read those memorable moments again and again. Oh wait, you say you didn't buy the book or purchase the airline tickets? It's not too late.

Internet technology vulnerable to eavesdroppers

In short, the Internet is like a cordless phone. There are few regulations governing this new technology, and the risk of having eavesdroppers is all yours.

If you store information on any computer and use the Internet, you may have problems.

There is a whole slew of viruses that can corrupt files. There are "Unrecoverable disk errors," "Sorry, a system error occurred: Restart," and the dreaded "X caused a General Protection Fault in Y."

In fact, the only thing worse than any of the above items is having someone sift through the personal information stored on your hard disk drive.

Be it a bored hacker (for the challenge), Uncle Sam (to search for child pornography) or Microsoft (to determine whether you are the registered owner of Windows 95), there is someone with a compelling reason to snoop.

Absolutely nothing on your hard drive is safe from prying eyes. So the responsibility is yours. If you don't want people snooping around in your personal files, here are a few basic safety techniques:

■ Do not leave your computer online when not in use.

As long as your modem is connected to another, there is a possibility that someone can get into your personal files.

■ Do not send credit card numbers or other delicate information via modem without the appropriate encryption software.

Netscape, the most popular World Wide Web browser, offers improved encryption in version 1.12 and 2.0 beta, available on the web at (<http://www.home.netscape.com/>).

■ Realize that anytime you send e-mail, someone could intercept it.

Every document you send can be copied and stored in memory banks around the world.

■ Protect your password, and change it often.

This is obviously the most preventable way for someone to gain access to your account.

In short, the Internet is like a cordless phone. There are few regulations governing this new technology, and the risk of having eavesdroppers is all yours.

Use it with caution.

Exploring the facts behind

Evolution, Creation

During the past few weeks, there has been much discussion on the issue of evolution and its implications. A great deal of this discussion has been prompted by myself, and I hope it has caused many people to consider this issue in greater detail, as it has for me.

As I have participated in many discussions and received many kind, generous letters about my position, the one thing I have discovered is, for the most part, one side knows very little about the other.

As history indicates, when this occurs, the situation frequently disintegrates into a yelling match and a debate of insults. The same has happened here to some extent. Little has been accomplished by personal attacks. The human race has been blessed with the ability to reason, let us use it.

I have been repeatedly urged to research and discover more about evolution on the basis that I knew little to nothing about it. To some degree, that is correct.

I am a philosopher, not a scientist. Hence, I headed for the library.

Although there have been attempts to make some kind of synthesis between evolution and creation, this is not a productive intellectual activity.

For a Christian to say God created the earth and then walked away, limits the ability to have a personal relationship with Him and diminishes His sovereignty. For the Christian, one cannot maintain to be a Christian and a (fill in the blank). To do so denies the perfect work of Christ by trying to add imperfect human works to it.

For an Evolutionist to say God had something to do with the presence of humans takes away from one's ability to measure and examine data empirically and draw conclusions from it, which is the crux of evolution.

Even recognizing that a very powerful, as of yet undiscovered force played a role takes away from the ability to maintain that collecting data and making other observations will be able to produce an answer for our beginnings.

In the course of my research on evolution, I discovered two things. First, evolution is a set of theories based on large quantities of data and due to the nature of this data and the theories derived from it, the theory of evolution is in a state of perpetual change.

Due to this, conclusions drawn from artifacts are sometimes shown to be false at a later date. Nebraska Man, for example, was derived from the discovery of a tooth at an archaeological dig within that state. From that tooth, conclusions about what that man looked like, what his behavior was and how his family looked were created.

At the time, he was thought to be a link between modern and prehistoric man. However, the tooth was discovered to have come from a pig, rather than a man, at a later date. Similar revelations have occurred in the dismissal of other links, such as Java Man, Neanderthal Man and Piltown Man.

Secondly, the conclusions drawn from the data are logical and rational in fashion. While I have been unable to discover a complete, unified discourse on the entire theory of evolution, most conclusions that are drawn from data are sensible, based on what can be measured and observed. Once again, evolution works best within the realm of the laboratory, and becomes cloudy while trying to accommodate the existence of a supernatural force.

However, other anomalies also exist. If we assume that the earth is very old, and that the progress from primitive organisms to man occurred under the auspices of gradualism, there should be an enormous fossil record of transitional species, rather than infrequent discoveries of portions of a creature usually identified as Homo Erectus.

To avoid this dilemma, the theory of Punctuated Equilibrium was created, which maintains life evolved in unexplainable rapid growth spurts, requiring us to depend on an unparalleled scientific model.

As such, to claim evolution is correct means one must place certainty in a theory that is constantly changing as more data is discovered — and is not provable.

To do so requires an enormous leap of faith. In regards to his book, Darwin himself said, "You will be greatly disappointed (by the forthcoming book); it will be grievously too hypothetical."

On the other hand, while Creation does not explicitly answer how old the earth is, despite claims by many creationists, the Biblical source is neither falsified by claims the earth is young or old (Genesis 1:1). In the same manner, while there is no thorough Biblical examination of the fossil record or other components of the beginning, the Bible is archaeologically accurate in the specifics it does maintain.

Creation is not falsified simply because there is no Biblical discourse on the Precambrian era, just as evolution is not falsified simply because it does not account for the supernatural.

In the final analysis, it is not possible to empirically prove what happened at Time Zero. Ultimately, a person will believe in one or the other on the basis of faith. Evolution, in regards to the creation of the universe and humans, is not scientific fact because it is neither reproducible, observable, nor measurable.

Neither life nor cosmic bodies, such as stars, have been created or produced in the laboratory. Creation was brought about by a living God who can not be measured or examined under the microscope.

BRAMLAGE CONFUSION

Editor,

Victoria and Laura Battle's letter prompted me to make a few phone calls on campus regarding the issue of accessibility, not because of who they are, or what their needs are specifically, but because of what they addressed, and that is the attitude of this institution toward the students and those who make it possible for the students to be here.

Commencement is a highly emotional time for most people — graduates and family alike.

Commencement is not only for honoring and awarding students for their achievements, but also for family and friends who make their journeys possible.

If commencement was meant for graduates only, family and friends would not be invited to attend and accommodations would not be made for all involved.

I realize K-State's policy is to accommodate the students' needs, but apparently that policy is being overshadowed by the "I-can't-care-less" attitudes of some employees.

There are hundreds of specific needs dealt with on a daily basis on this campus.

How a policy to accommodate based on need could be ignored for such an important occasion as commencement is unbelievable.

However, it is apparent from the Battles' letter someone, somewhere had the wrong attitude about accommodation of the needs of their family, as well as other students with similar family needs.

"I don't know how this is handled but let me find out and get back to you" is a better answer than giving someone the impression the University doesn't care about the specific needs of its students and families attending events here on campus.

Luckily for Victoria and Laura, there are people in "high" places to resolve these types of issues when they arise.

I did some checking of my own and spoke separately with Charles Thomas, Bramlage Director; Gretchen Holden, Disabled Student Services; and Jane Rowlett, Classified Affairs (I even made a call to President Jon Wefald's office) inquiring as to their knowledge of the issue raised in Victoria and Laura's letter.

Their comments were pretty much of the same nature — "Who said that?" "That issue was already resolved, but I will check into it immediately," and "We will do what is necessary to make this right."

I was impressed with the speed at which they did just that. When I last spoke with Rowlett and Thomas, their comments to me about this whole situation were basically, if someone needs assistance, and the help they are getting is not sufficient or acceptable, then pick up the phone and call or go see the next person up the ladder until you are satisfied with the resolution of your issue.

My guess is that whoever started this "fire" has some explaining to do. And rightly so.

People should be accountable for their actions as well as what they say. And if they can't keep informed of current information on issues as "hot" as these, then they should consider another position with less impact to the perception by others of this campus' policies and attitudes.

METRIC MISUNDERSTANDING

Editor,

I am writing in response to Kevyn Jacobs' column on the metric system in the Dec. 4, 1995, issue of the Collegian. I agree with Jacobs when he says the metric system is an easier system to compute or figure than the system we have now.

However, I believe Jacobs misunderstands the reasons why our country is so slow to switch over completely to the metric system.

For those of you unfamiliar with the agricultural world, land is divided into acres to be farmed or pastured.

One might say, "Well, that's easy enough, we'll convert everything to hectares." That will not be simple.

Farmers buy/farm land in sections, half sections, and quarter sections. The problem is, roads (dirt, gravel, and even highways) separate these sections of land.

The entire nation was divided up by sections, which equal one mile by one mile. We will either tear up a lot of roads or else do extensive converting if the system changes.

Working with "round numbers" may not quite be the heaven Jacobs thinks it is when converting all these roads and pieces of land.

The reason for the U.S. being slow to change is not necessarily based on "arrogance and stubbornness." There are significant reasons for our hesitation with the metric system as I explained above.

Besides, what would we call the Quarter Pounder with Cheese — "Royale With Cheese?"

a place to call home

home pages on the World Wide Web are easy to construct story by Kevyn Jacobs,

E-Collegian editor

So you have extra time on your hands during winter break and you want to construct a homepage on the World Wide Web?

Here's what you need to do to get a homepage up and running on the K-State Unix system.

1. You need to obtain a Unix account on the K-State Unix system. It is on this account that your home page will reside. Take your student ID to Room 9 in the basement of Fairchild Hall during business hours Monday through Friday, in order to open up an account. There is no charge for this service.

2. Now that you have an account, log into it and type the following:

```
chmod g-s,og+xs ~ mkdir .html
chmod g-s,og+xs ~/.html

The "mkdir" part of this command is the Unix command to create a new directory on your account — in this case, called ".html".

The rest of the commands change the permission on your account and .html directory and making them world readable so people on the net can access your homepage.

Don't worry about memorizing these commands — you only have to do them once, when you first set up the home page.

3. Your .html directory is now set up. This is the directory in which all of your homepage files will reside. The next time you want to work on your homepage, you need to type the following once you log in to Unix:

```
cd .html

"cd" is the Unix command to change directories — in this case, you are telling it to change to the .html directory.

4. You are ready to start constructing your homepage. However, there are some preliminary facts that you need to know:

■ Homepages are written in a fairly simple language called "HTML," which stands for HyperText Markup Language. HTML is not difficult, but it is probably worth your while to do some homework. There is a very good primer on the net called "A Beginner's Guide to HTML," which can be found at (<http://www.ncsa.uiuc.edu/General/Internet/WWW/HTMLPrimer.html>).

■ Other good resources are available at Netscape's "Creating Net Sites" page, which is located at (<http://home.netscape.com/home/how-to-create-web-services.html>). You can access this quickly if you are using Netscape by pulling down the "help" menu and choosing "How to Create Web Services."

■ HTML files are stored in your Unix directory as simple text files. You can use any text editor you want to create your HTML files, but I recommend the pico text editor because of its simplicity and ease of use. To use the pico editor in Unix, just type pico and the file name. All the instructions you need to use pico are given in the program's window.

■ All HTML files should end in the extension ".html" ("HTML" is seen on PC machines). The default file that a Web browser uses when it accesses a directory is called "index.html". This is what you will call the main part of your home page.

■ On the Unix system, every time you put a new file in your .html directory, including graphics files, you need to change the permissions on that file to make it readable to people on the net. This is done by typing:

```
chmod a+rx filename
```

If you ever get a message saying you don't have permission to read a file on the Web, it is probably because someone forgot to change the permissions.

5. Create the index.html file:
pico index.html

Once you've created the index.html file, type in this minimal HTML document:

```
<HTML>
<HEAD>
<TITLE> This is my homepage </TITLE> </HEAD>
```

```
<BODY>
```

This is where all of your homepage stuff will go.

```
</BODY>
```

```
</HTML>
```

Save your work (^O in pico) and exit pico (^X). Change the permissions on this file `chmod a+rx index.html` — you'll only need to do it once to each file — and you're ready to pull up your web page. Load up Netscape and type in your homepage address:
<http://www.ksu.edu/~username>

I recommend Netscape over Mosaic, since it lets you do neat things like blinking text and centering.

If everything went right, you should be looking at a home page that is titled "This is my home page" and says "This is where all of your home page stuff will go."

Now you can go back into the home page and edit the index.html file to your tastes. Here are some commands you can use:

<HR> Horizontal Rule. Draws a line across the screen.

<LI> List item, makes a bullet.

<BR> Line break. Start on next line.

<P> Paragraph end. HTML ignores carriage returns and compresses extra spaces down into one, so you need to specifically tell it where one paragraph will end and another one begins. The <P> command skips a line before starting the next paragraph.

<H1> text goes here </H1>
Headline size one.

Notice that this command uses two "tags," an open and close tag. The open tag, "<H1>" says this is the start of a size 1 headline. "</H1>" is the end of the size one headline. Everything in between the two tags will be headline size one.

<H2> Headline size two </H2>

<B> Boldface type </B>

<I> Italic type </I>

<TT> Teletype Font </TT>

<CENTER> Centered text </CENTER>

<BLINK> Blinking Text </BLINK>

Images can be added to your homepage using the following command:

```
```

Put the name of the picture (.gif format preferred) between the quotes. The .gif image needs to be in your .html directory, and don't forget to change the permissions on it.

Probably one of the most important tags in HTML is the hypertext link tag. This is what makes blue text (or pictures) on the screen that you can click on. Called an "anchor tag," its basic format is like this:

```
<A HREF="" "> </A>
```

Notice there is an open and close part to this tag. Everything that comes between these two tags is what will be blue on the screen.

The part between the quotes is where you put the address of what you want to link to. So, if you wanted to run a link to the Collegian homepage, you would type:

```
<AHREF=""http://www.spub.ksu.edu/"> Kansas State Collegian </A>

"Kansas State Collegian" would be on the screen in blue, and if you clicked on it, you'd get our home page.

There are many other HTML commands available out there for you to use. One of the best pieces of advice any beginning home page creator can follow is to use the "View Source" option liberally. This command can be found on your menu bar at the top of your Web browser and allows you to see the commands that went into making any page on the Web. If you see something on the Web you like and want to know how it was done, this command will let you know.

This should be enough information to get you started putting up a homepage. There are many other fine resources available on the net. Computer and Networking Services has such a page available, at the address: (<http://www.ksu.edu/creating-homepage.html>)

Smatterings

by Scott Allen Miller

Block off Lovers Lane! It's job fair season

The Collegian reported that an M60A3 tank from Fort Riley visited campus last Thursday to allow students to be exposed to military hardware. What went unreported is that some military recruiting activity was also going on while the tank was parked in the middle of 17th Street for several hours in front of Seaton and Durland halls. Out of fairness to other prospective employers of college graduates (such as J.C. Penney, the FBI and McDonald's), they might be allowed to block access to Lafene Health Center with their future job recruiting efforts as well.

Look out All-Faiths

Some monks in Hereford, England's Belmont Abbey were strapped for cash after the monastery's boys' school shut down. To make up the deficit in cash flow, the resourceful men of the habit have taken to hosting parties and dinner dances. Following this lead, St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York is rumored to be the site of Madonna's next album release party and St. Peter's Basilica in the Vatican City is said to be considering hosting a Pearl Jam/Soundgarden/Hole Grunge-A-Thon in early 1996. Rolling papers with the Pope's image would be sold at concession counters.

Deadly things come in small packages

He pled guilty to federal charges of wire fraud, but Larry Harris said there was a good reason why he tried to buy freeze-dried bubonic plague bacteria from a laboratory. He claimed to the lab that he was certified to deal with the extremely deadly bacteria when he ordered it. The lab sent the bacteria but turned him in later after becoming suspicious that Harris had lied about his qualifications. Harris' lawyer said the reason his client ordered the germs was to do research for a book on germ warfare. Apparently, Harris wanted the book to be historical in nature, not fiction.

But were they lowfat?

Newsweek reported that the Crayola company is pulling its food-scented crayons while maintaining that children didn't eat them. If the accuracy of the company's new non-food-scented markers are any indication of how accurate the food scents were in the crayons, the reasons why kids didn't eat them are obvious. One survey found that kids found the cedar chest scent smelled more like smoke or dog excrement, the daffodil scent smelled like an airplane cabin, and the leather jacket scent smelled of dead worms. Let us pray that the Crayola, in its wisdom, doesn't ever create a grandmother scent.

This was probably not the first time

Kevin Hall of Bridgeport, Conn., had a close call recently. He was trying to impress his girlfriend by sticking a sawed-off shotgun down his pants. As you probably already guessed, the gun went off, giving him a powder burn on the inside of his thigh and only cutting his genitals. When police found Hall, his pants were still smoking. He tried to claim he was the victim of a drive-by shooting but his girlfriend told police what actually happened. Hall was charged with possession of a sawed-off shotgun, reckless endangerment and illegal discharge of a firearm. No one should be too surprised about Hall's relatively minor injury. It's common knowledge that shotguns do more damage on big targets.

Dear Ryan: The nation's No. 1 ranked sports-advice column

Before I start my cross-country, frequent-flier program (Kansas City to Minneapolis to Fargo, N.D., to Minneapolis to Los Angeles to San Diego to Los Angeles to Minneapolis to Fargo to Minneapolis to Kansas City) which begins Dec. 19 and ends Jan. 12, I'll open up the mail bag to lighten my carry-on load and play problem-solver for some big names in the world of sports.

They have taken the time to write to us, so we'll take the time to respond:

Dear Ryan,

The flags in the Sooner Nation are still at half-mast after our 5-5-1 season in which the only teams we beat were San Diego State, North Texas, SMU, Iowa State and Missouri. I knew it would be tough to rebuild the program, but we at least thought we could go to the Independence Bowl this season. What should we have done differently?

H. Schnellenberger
Norman, Okla.

First of all, Coach, this was a mediocre team to start with, but you were playing the Sooners up all through the preseason. OU fell flat against CU and KU after taking early leads and basically gave up against K-State and Oklahoma State. Because this team was 6-6 last season, you should have played the underdog role in the preseason, but once the going got tough, you should have started Garrick McGee at quarterback.

Dear Ryan,

Warren Moon getting hot at the tail end of the season is making me sick. If Moon would have had a terrible year and the Vikings wouldn't have made the playoffs, they surely would have forced the old man to retire and given me a shot to win the job in 1996. Now, Moon is throwing touchdowns by the bushels, and I'm still wearing a baseball cap on the sideline. I don't even hold a clipboard. Should I demand a trade, or just moan for some playing time?

C. May

Winter Park, Minn.

As a fan of the Purple — Viking purple that is — rumors were swirling around the Twin Cities when the Vikings lost three straight that you would get a chance to play late in the season if the Vikings were out of the playoff picture. But don't fear, Denny Green knows you (not Brad Johnson) are the quarterback of the future. Next summer, you can win the backup job, and after that, the starting job in two years.

Dear Ryan,

Ever since I finally rid myself of my former quarterback (Ray Goff), I'm looking for a big-time coach to bring the pride back between the hedges. Even the hedges are now gone because of the Olympics. I'm interested in Bill Snyder and Glen Mason. What are my chances of landing them?

V. Dooley

Athens, Ga.

Forget it, Vince. Why make a move to a pressure-cooker when, if you're Snyder, you're worshipped by the fans and administration and basically have a blank check for a salary? Mason, on the other hand, is another story. He got a break this season when the Hawks went 9-2, and he could be looking for a job where football is the main item of interest. Give Glen a call.

Dear Ryan,

I hear some columnist in this paper called my team "unimpressive," my secondary "weak," and my quarterback "ignorant," while predicting a 45-6 K-State win. Please defend my squad.

S. Lubick

Fort Collins, Colo.

No one really pays attention to that column anyway, but the Rams are 8-3 this season. They have won 10-straight conference road games and went to the Holiday Bowl last year as the WAC champion. Their strong safety, Greg Myers, is a heart-and-soul type of player who also is the WAC's all-time leader in punt return yardage, while their ignorant quarterback, Moses Moreno, threw for more than 200 yards in the title-clinching win over San Diego State, which was played at the same stadium as the Dec. 29 game.

Dear Ryan,

Although I won't personally comment on our chances of going to the Super Bowl, take a stab at it.

M. Schottenheimer,

Kansas City, Mo.

The Chiefs, at 11-2, have no chance to win the Super Bowl this season. The 49ers and Cowboys will meet Jan. 14 at Texas Stadium in Super Bowl XXX.

3 Wildcats are AP All-Americans

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

The awards keep pouring in for the K-State football team. Three Wildcats were selected to the 1995 Associated Press All-America Team Wednesday, and three were chosen for the UPI All-America Team.

Junior wide receiver Kevin Lockett, who was named honorable mention by UPI, said the recognition is good for the team.

"It's great that a lot of national people recognize that K-State has some real quality players," Lockett said.

Sophomore cornerback Chris Canty was named to the first team by both organizations. His eight interceptions — including two returned for touchdowns — tied him for first in the nation and earned him first-team all-America honors from the Football Writers Association, Football News and the NFL Draft Report.

Canty was also chosen as one of three finalists for the Jim Thorpe Award, given annually to the nation's top defensive back, and will attend the ESPN Football Awards Show, to be aired at 8:30 tonight on local channel 25.

Senior defensive tackle Tim Colston was chosen to the second team by both, and was named Big 8 Defensive Player of the Year earlier this season. Colston received first-team honors from Walter Camp, the American Football Coaches Association and the NFL Draft Report.

Senior linebacker Percell Gaskins was named to the third-team by the Associated Press. Gaskins was one of 10 semifinalists for the Butkus Award, given annually to the nation's top linebacker, and one of seven finalists for Defensive Player of the Year by Football News.

Canty, Colston and Gaskins helped lead a Wildcat defense which ranked first in the nation in total defense. The Cats allowed only 250.8 yards per game.

Lockett's 56 receptions for 797 yards and 13 touchdowns also earned him third-team honors from the NFL Draft Report and honorable mention by Football News.

"It feels great," Lockett said after learning of the award.

With a year of eligibility remaining, he said first-team is one of his goals for next year, but the team comes first.

"It's a goal, but if we can come in and win the Big 12 and go to another bowl game, that is more important."

K-State falls to Ohio 69-68

■ Comeback falls short as Wildcats drop second straight game

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

K-State went scoreless in the last 1:55 Wednesday night, allowing the Ohio Bobcats to steal the game, 69-68. Ohio's Natalie Britt scored the game's last five points, including a baseline jumper with 38 seconds remaining to give the Bobcats the lead.

K-State coach Brian Agler said the Wildcats didn't play well in the last few minutes.

"We turned the ball over; we missed free throws; we fouled them; and they hit their free throws," Agler said. "We didn't play well the first 25 minutes of the game or the last three minutes."

The Cats never led in the first half. The Bobcats opened the game with a 3-pointer, and extended their lead to 14 on two occasions. The Cats made a short run toward the end of the half, cutting the lead to seven, but went into intermission down 37-27 after a trey from Bobcat Renee Robare.

"For a while, I didn't think we'd ever get over the hump," Agler said.

But the Cats came back in the second, going on a 33-18 run spurred by a 3-point shot by sophomore point guard Amanda Chamberlain.

K-State took its first lead of the game on a pair of free throws by freshman post Jenny Coalson with 5:04 remaining. The Cats stretched their lead to five, 66-61, on a baseline drive by sophomore wing Brit Jacobson.

"When we made our run, we were more aggressive," Agler said. "We played better defense, and we had a group on the floor that executed and got us some momentum."

Then OU's Britt took over, scoring the Bobcats' last seven points to put the Cats away.

Agler said K-State is practicing well, but the Cats aren't playing with that intensity in their games.

"There's no team in the country — men or women — that plays harder in practice than we do. But that's what coaches mean when they talk about players stepping up. They've got to carry it over into games."

"It's just not getting relayed. And it's not getting done."

Junior wing Andria Jones led the Cats in scoring with 19 points. Jacobson added 16, and Coalson posted a career-high 12 in her first career start.

Jacobson grabbed nine boards to lead the team in rebounding, with Jones adding seven and Chamberlain five. Chamberlain's five assists led the Cats.

Britt paced the Bobcats with 19 points, followed by 13 from Gwyneth Ballard.

K-State next takes the floor at 2 p.m. Sunday, when Michigan visits Bramlage Coliseum.

"We turned the ball over; we missed free throws; we fouled them; and they hit their free throws. We didn't play well the first 25 minutes of the game or the last three minutes."

Freshman Jenny Coalson steps out in first career start, steps up with career high

Shana Newell
staff writer

In Wednesday night's loss to Ohio, there were very few bright spots to be found. But if one had to be found, the performance by freshman wing Jenny Coalson would be the spot.

Jenny did some good things in the second half," Coach Brian Agler said. "She had a big shot in the second half that cut their lead from four to one."

With Ohio up

by ten points at the half, Coalson was the hatchet that chopped away at the Bobcats' lead in the second period. Her aggressive performance enabled the Wildcats to jump ahead for the first time in the contest with five minutes remaining in the game.

Jenny is as good a post defensive player as we've got. She has the physical stature and is very intelligent.

BRIAN AGLER

K-STATE WOMEN'S BASKETBALL COACH

Coalson had 12 points, a career high. She was two-for-three from the field against Ohio but was eight-of-nine in free throws.

"Coach said that I have a tendency to pass the ball, and I'm working on that," Coalson said. "I need to go after the rebound and take it up strong. I am trying to focus on that."

The effect of that focus is starting to show. Eight of Coalson's 12 points were from the charity line as the Ohio defense found it difficult to guard against her drive.

But Agler said Coalson still has room for improvement but he hopes experience will help move her along.

"Jenny is as good a post

I'm still a little nervous, but with each day I'm becoming more confident.

JENNY COALSON

K-STATE FRESHMAN WING

defensive player as we've got. She has the physical stature and is very intelligent," he said.

"But she still looks very mechanical and plays that way."

"I really believe that she plays that way so that she doesn't make mistakes," Agler said. "She doesn't have a lot of fluidity right now and hopefully that will change soon."

If this game was any indication, spending a lot of time on the floor is definitely in Coalson's future. In her first start as a Wildcat, Coalson was on the court for 29 and a half minutes.

Coalson said the transition from high school basketball to Division I college basketball was a big step up for her.

"As much as we work in practice, it's easy to pick things up if you have it in your mind to pick them up," she said.

"I'm still a little nervous, but with each day I'm becoming more confident."

Even the Internet is beginning to look a lot like Christmas

Darin Siefkes
contributing writer

Christmas time is always a hectic time for students. Not only must we deal with finals, there is that always-annoying gift buying that we must slip into our schedules. The net is here to help with unusual gift ideas.

(<http://www.halcyon.com/mcphee/>)

For that person who has everything: Archie McPhee will have the gift that you need. Its gifts can be gross, disgusting and in bad taste, but they are always weird.

A popular gift for a fellow student is the "Spare Brain" section, (just in case a loved one has blown his or hers due to negligence, chemicals, or finals). Also available are other anatomical pieces, such as hearts, eyes and you can always give yourself a robotic arm.

(<http://www.vivace.com/burrito/html/welcome.html>)

Nothing says "I love you" like the gift of a burrito. Burrito Express guarantees to deliver their world famous flying burritos to anyone's front door the very next day. The prices are a bit high (starting at $37), but these are great burritos.

(<http://sun.bucknell.edu/~boulter/crayon/>)

If money is a problem this year, CRAYON can be a great gift for your net friends. "CRAYON Your Own Newspaper" is a fun and very thoughtful way to give a gift for no cash.

A surfer just has to fill out a list of what they would like to see in a daily paper. Then CRAYON does the rest, putting a paper together by your specifications together for you.

The user then just saves what the computer puts out. It works because it only allows locations that don't change on the submission forms.

(<http://www.spiderweb.com/hempess/>)

What is Christmas without the gift of hemp? Every part of the cannabis plant that is legal is sold here for purely medicinal purposes.

Hemp oil, for example, is mixed with numerous other natural ingredients to make some of the best health care products on the market.

Hemp Essentials provides lip balm, moisturizing cream, soap and facial creams (among other products) for patrons across the net.

(<http://xweb.com/wren/whacky.html>)

Instead of having to stare at the beautiful traffic as it flows by, your friends can have a nice painting to view. This location sells some fantastic Venetian blinds with murals painted on them.

The Whacky Shack has horses, mountains and whales among others that can turn any room into a personal paradise.

My favorite gift idea here is for the handyman. A tape recorder in the tape measure will actually record up to 12 seconds of audio. This is perfect for taking measurements without a pen and paper.

This location also provides genuine Mexican hats with jingle bells on them, jingle bell decorating strips and bunches of other cool things.

HOUSING

Residence halls will remain open during holiday vacations

Becky Sheridan
staff reporter

Students living in residence halls could still have a continuous housing program that will not shut down during school breaks.

As an experiment, the residence halls remained open for the first time during Thanksgiving break and will remain open during the winter break, Chuck Werring, director of Housing and Dining Services, said.

"We had a lot of students that were indicating to us that they would like that as an additional service," he said. "So I pursued it."

Werring said he contacted the K-State Association of Residence Halls to talk about having a continuous housing program sometime in the future.

"In this program, students would have 24-hour access, seven days a week, throughout the year to come and go as they please," he said.

Werring said the residence halls were left open as an experiment to see how many students stayed over break and if having continuous housing could be an option. So far, the option has remained free to residents.

Shah Hasan, assistant director of residence life, said the only difference in how the residence halls were run over break, and how they are normally run, is that they were locked 24 hours a day.

"This way, only residents can have access into the building with their cards and into their rooms with their keys," Hasan said.

He said there were two desks open and two roving teams of two people, 24 hours a day, as well.

"Basically, we had six people around in each hall, all day and all night long, and this is the same format that will be used over Christmas break," Hasan said.

Werring said having a continuous housing program would be a good option for students to have.

"A lot of students work, don't have anywhere else to go, or just leave for a short time and want to come back early," he said.

Denise Sanders, sophomore in speech pathology, worked as vacation staff during Thanksgiving break and said everything ran smoothly.

"Nothing really went wrong, except for some fire alarms that malfunctioned in West Hall," Sanders said. "And it gave me a chance to meet a lot of interesting people."

"It's really helpful to students who live out of the country so they don't have to make other arrangements, and it's good if you're from Manhattan and you know there will be a lot of people at your house," she said. "You know you always have somewhere to go and stay."

Hasan said only a few students stayed during Thanksgiving because of the short time span but that winter break should give them a better indication of student needs.

"I think we'll have to see what kind of traffic there is and what the student reaction is, but anytime we can provide additional service to students, it's good," Hasan said.

Bill 852, was also discussed.

"This is a terrible bill that would exclude public opinion from public lands management, create more red tape, hobble the government's ability to manage land the public owns, elevate grazing to a dominant use for public lands and introduce radical changes in water rights," according to a handout compiled by Cokin.

The Audubon Society meets monthly to discuss different environmental issues.

"There is a definite interest in the Audubon Society among students," Prudence Siebert, Audubon Society publicity intern, said.

HOLIDAYS

Residence hall displays seasonal charm with lights, lights, lights and more lights

Becky Sheridan
staff reporter

Residents have been decking the halls of Marlatt Hall with lights, bows and holiday spirit.

The C Wing of first floor Marlatt is coated with lights — 3,380 lights to be exact.

There are blinking lights, chaser lights, lights draping the ceiling and lights on the doors.

Spencer Jacobson, freshman in English, said he started putting the lights up last weekend.

"It all got started when I brought back about 500 feet of lights from home, and then other people thought it was cool and followed," he said.

Mark Condon, freshman in computer science, said he was so impressed with the decorations that he went out and bought four strands of his own lights.

"The other end of the hall, opposite from where my room is, was the only part decorated, so I decided to do my end, too," Condon said.

Condon said it is fun to see people's response when they walk into the hall and see so many lights.

"It's much more impressive in the hall than it would be in all the windows because of the small space," he said.

Jacobson said a lot of people come by just to look at the lights because there are so many of them.

"We have no hall lights on right now, other than these, and it's so bright you could read out here," he said. "It's amazing to have this many lights packed into a 150-foot hallway."

It is even more amazing that someone would actually count them.

Chad Cooper, freshman in mechanical engineering, said he did just that.

"It was about 3 a.m., and everyone went to bed except me because I wasn't tired, so I counted all the lights out of sheer boredom," Cooper said.

Cooper said he personally counted 3,180 lights, and someone added 200 more later.

In addition to the lights, some of the doors are covered with Christmas paper and bows, and there is a Power Cat head made out of purple garland on one of the walls, Jacobson said.

"We even have Christmas music playing, but you can only listen to so much," he said.

Jacobson said his roommate, Matt Hawkins, freshman in graphic design, also made artwork of cartoon characters, which he cut out of construction paper and posted up and down the hall.

Jacobson said C wing is participating in a contest by floors for the best Christmas decorations. Halls will be judged Friday.

Residents of C Wing of the first floor of Marlatt Hall decorated their hall with Christmas lights, garland and artwork of cartoon characters for a Christmas decoration contest.

CITY

Chamber of Commerce includes a $27,000 increase going to the Chamber.

Randy Martin, president of the Chamber of Commerce, said the increase in money is because of the increase in demand for the Chamber in the economic development for Manhattan.

Martin said the Chamber is spending much more time on economic development than they have in the past. He said the Chamber is doing a good job in serving the city's economic development.

"We've all worked hard as a team to get good successes for the economic development for the city of Manhattan," Martin said.

Hall said he wanted to know why the city was paying 43 percent of the economic development salaries before he could approve the new contract.

Martin said what the Chamber does for economic development is well worth the money the city pays.

"In 1995, what we did for the economy was worth much more than $75,000," Martin said.

The Chamber received $75,000 under the 1995 contract with the city.

Martin said the city would not get the same caliber of excellence if the salaries were 100-percent paid for by private sources.

Hall said he wants to be able to answer to taxpayers' questions about what they are getting for all of their money.

"I feel very comfortable as a taxpayer myself that we are getting a very good program for our money," Martin said.

The contract was originally written for $120,000, but the commissioners decided to amend the contract to $102,000.

Mayor Edith Stunkel said the change in dollar amounts is because the commission deleted $12,000 from the contract that was designated for a Fort Riley consultant project that will have to have its own separate contract.

An additional $6,000 was deducted from the contract because the city decided to take on the responsibilities for the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board, Stunkel said.

Hall said the contract was still for too much money over the amount of last year's contract and he could not approve of the excessive amount.

The commissioners also voted on a charter ordinance that would allow the commission or a future commission to vote on changing the quorum of three to four.

The change in quorum would allow commissioners to discuss city issues with only two of them present in a private setting.

Commissioner Sydney Carlin said she did not approve of the opportunity, for the commission to change the quorum to four.

"I believe people and government are better served if we all get the information at the same time," Carlin said. Hall said the issue is something the citizens of Manhattan should be able to decide for themselves.

"In my opinion, this is somewhat of a change in city government in which I absolutely think the public should have a say in the matter in a vote," Hall said.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said the public has not shown much concern in the quorum issue since the commissioners began discussion on the issue.

He said there has been little public input and what has been said was favorable. There is no strong desire to vote on the issue, Snead said.

"I think it's a legislative issue, and we need to decide it for ourselves," Carlin said.

Snead said public participation will not diminish if the quorum is raised to four.

He said he would like to have the opportunity to discuss issues with another commissioner outside of commission meetings and work sessions.

Because the commission's quorum is three, no two members of the city commission can meet to discuss public business outside of an open meeting.

Hall made a motion to deny the charter ordinance and the vote passed.

■ Former police officer accustomed to University life

He once was a police officer in northeastern Ohio, but he traded in his badge for the title of Strong Complex director in charge of Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile Halls.

Andy Fink said he liked being a police officer, but it was not hard for him to make a switch to complex director because he was still able to work one-on-one with people.

"It was easy for me to make the transition because now I'm not looking to catch people doing things or trying to control them," Fink said.

"Now, I get to work with students and help them do well in life, and I also get to help them learn from their experiences."

He said he couldn't see making a long-time career of being a police officer.

"I think that it takes a real special person to be able to be effective as a cop over a long period of time, and higher education was something that I was real interested in, and I decided to pursue that instead of the criminal-justice route," Fink said.

Fink then pursued his education at the University of South Carolina, where he received a master's degree in education and his first job as a hall director.

When he came to K-State, Fink was the director of Moore Hall for two years. He has been complex director for 1-1/2 years.

Being a hall director is a lot of work, and he has many duties and obligations, Fink said.

One of his jobs is to oversee meetings, such as those of Van Zile Hall Governing Board.

"I am the advisor for HGB, and I help answer their questions about activities, events or policies," Fink said. "Right now, I am trying to help them work on student recognition because there are many people within the halls who are doing well in leadership positions."

The president of Van Zile HGB, Dustin Springer, junior in elementary and special education, said he liked working with Fink, because he is an outgoing person who cares about his residents.

"Andy really cares about the people he lives with and the Strong Complex," Springer said.

► ART DEPARTMENT

No nudes is good news for art students

Sara Edwards
staff writer

For the first time in its history, the Department of Art is giving a refund on some student fees.

Figure Drawing I and II students will be getting money back from a fee that pays for nude models in the classes.

"My students, they were pretty impressed that we made the surplus available," said Duane Noblett, associate professor of art and drawing area coordinator.

The art department has a surplus in money from fees because figure drawing classes were over-enrolled. Because of the large number of students in the classes, the art department had more money than it needed to pay the nude models.

"The demand has always been great, but enrollment tends to flux," Noblett said.

The art department will be offering an $8 or less refund to students sometime in February.

The department is not sure how much money to refund at this time because all the bills to the models haven't been paid.

"Like any new program you start, bugs need to be worked out," Noblett said.

Anna Holcombe, art department head, said she was happy the students could get the money back.

"I think it's really neat we're able to give a refund," Holcombe said. "We try to be really careful about what is charged and what is spent."

This was the first year the art department decided to charge a fee to figure drawing students. The fee was $32.

Students in other art classes are charged a fee for supplies they use in their projects, Holcombe said.

The art department is charging students for nude models to be in line with the structure of students paying in other areas, Holcombe said.

Limited funding from the state is another reason the art department is charging the fee.

"In the past, universities had more support from the state," Holcombe said. "Unfortunately, more of these costs are passed on to the student."

Because the department charged the fee, more students were able to enroll in the classes. In the past, it was only available in the spring semester.

► CRIME AND PUNISHMENT

Manhattan serial killer executed in Missouri

Collegian staff

Topeka-born serial killer Tony Joe LaRette, 44, followed a pattern when he killed his victims in Florida and the Manhattan area.

LaRette, who killed Manhattan resident Tracy Miller Nov. 2, 1978, was lethally injected Nov. 29 in Missouri.

Miller, wife of a Manhattan judge, was found with multiple stab wounds in her Manhattan residence. When LaRette confessed to the killing, he said he followed Miller, 26, and her 16-month-old son home from a convenience store.

"His most common method would be to follow people off the street, knock on the door, scam his way in and then attack," said Capt. Allen Raynor, the original Riley County Police investigator in the Miller case.

Using a stranglehold, LaRette would cut the victim's throat with a knife, stab the victim multiple times and then sexually assault the victim, Raynor said.

"The guy was a killer and a con man," Raynor said.

Like many serial killers, LaRette had no association with his victims and would usually leave the area after the crime, Raynor said.

"All the crimes I've investigated connected to him were sexually motivated," Raynor said.

His victims were women who were usually dead or dying when he raped them.

"No one has ever suggested he was anything but an animal," Raynor said.

Richard Brede, an assistant professor of sociology at K-State, was one of five people LaRette spoke to during his sentence on death row. He said LaRette described his victims in a very possessive and factual way.

"He would always say, 'My victim,'" Brede said.

Brede said he was interested in speaking to LaRette because of the killer's activity in Manhattan and the surrounding area.

"He used Manhattan and K-State as a kind of hunting ground," Brede said. "I have reason to believe he also used the campus in Lincoln, Neb."

Brede said there is no doubt that some of the off-campus rapes in Manhattan and Lincoln from 1971 to 1974 were committed by LaRette.

During an interview with Raynor, LaRette drew a map and pointed to places where he committed rapes in the Manhattan and Junction City area

White Christmas

Horticulture professor developing special flowers

Rachelle Harkness
staff reporter

A K-State researcher has spent four years cultivating a white Christmas.

Alice Le Duc, assistant professor in horticulture, forestry and recreational resource, is developing a new strand of white-colored poinsettia.

"The plants are six feet high, and the trunk is about an inch and a half," she said.

Le Duc said the plant is a possible floral crop, but it will take more time to determine what type of lighting it will need to grow the largest burst of white bracts.

"Developing the white plant means having very different cultural requirements. It will probably take about 10 years before we will be able to make a breakthrough," she said.

The plants are kept under strict conditions and are available for the public to see, Le Duc said.

Le Duc's research began when she and two other graduate students took a trip to Mexico during summer 1991. They traveled about 6,000 miles looking for a wild white poinsettia.

"The poinsettia was collected in three different sites. They were very remote areas of

According to LeDuc, the plants were originally discovered in 1970. However, the plants she has at K-State were retrieved from Mexico during an expedition in 1991. Le Duc is working on developing the plants as a floral crop and hopes they will be available along with the traditional red poinsettias during the Christmas season within 10 to 15 years.

Mexico," she said.

Lynn Balthrop, junior in marketing, said she is curious as to what a white poinsettia looks like.

"It would be a nice change from all the red you see at Christmas,"

The original Christmas flower is red, but maybe someday, white poinsettias will be available to purchase in the stores.

"I love poinsettias at Christmas, and I think a white poinsettia would be a nice change," Christy Clem, senior in human development and family studies, said.

FORMER STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT ED SKOOG WINS POETRY AWARD

Ed Skoog, former student body president, recently received the 1995 Merriam-Frontier Award in Poetry at the University of Montana.

The award was given for a book entitled "Tool Kit, 15 Poems" and published by the University of Montana Press.

Skoog said he was proud to receive the award and plans to bring copies of the book back to Manhattan for sale at the Dusty Bookshelf after Christmas.

"I'm honored to have won the prize, and I'm happy to have something to put in people's hands," Skoog said.

Skoog has no certain plans for after graduation, but he said his writing would come first.

"In my list of priorities, my writing comes first, and my job comes second, and I wouldn't want to cheat anyone," Skoog said.

He is also considering moving to Kansas or New York after graduation.

Skoog said much of what he had learned about writing was taught to him by professors at K-State.

He said Elizabeth Dodd, associate professor of English; Steve Heller, professor of English; and Jonathan Holden, distinguished professor of English, taught him the craft of writing well.

"It wasn't until I took classes from these three that I saw how hard the work is but how rewarding it was," Skoog said.

In addition to poetry, Skoog also writes fiction and is now working on a book.

POETRY SUBMISSIONS WANTED

Area poets have an opportunity to submit their home-spun poetry to the Manhattan poetry contest before Feb. 5.

Jonathan Holden, distinguished professor of English, said he and two student poets would judge the contents and choose the top 75 entries.

Contest judge Quoc Bao Nguyen, sophomore in print journalism, initiated the poetry contest, Holden said.

"Quoc is very enthusiastic about it all," Holden said. "He likes poetry and wants to be a poet."

Winners will have their poems published in a book called "Sunflower Anthology: 75 Best Poems."

The top three poets will receive the book and a cash prize of $100, $75 and $50 respectively, as well as a compact disc.

"Some people have donated checks for the prize money," Holden said.

Besides the donations, Holden said money from entry fees would also go toward the prize-money pot.

Holden said there were some guidelines to enter in the contest: Each poem has a $1 entry fee; contestants must have a cover page with their name, address, phone number, year and major (if a student) and the title of the poem. Nothing but poetry text may appear on the poem.

Winners will be announced at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 20 at the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville.

A reading, reception and refreshments will be in their honor.

After 16 years of classes, Nelda Elder, senior in fine arts, will graduate this semester with a bachelor's degree. In 1979, Elder began taking one-to-three hours of classes per semester.

► CAMPUS

After 16 years: graduation

■ Associate professor sought second degree

James Dierking
staff reporter

More than a decade of classes will come to an end when one K-State student receives her degree Saturday. "Basically, I enjoy being a student," Nelda Elder, senior in fine arts, said.

After 16 years of work, Elder will graduate with a bachelor of fine arts degree this semester.

"She's one of those excellent students who challenges herself to go back to school to get a degree one hour at a time," said Diane Dollar, assistant professor of art and Elder's adviser.

In 1979, Elder began taking one to three hours of art classes per semester.

"It is sort of satisfying to have closure, but the process is what I've enjoyed," Elder said.

Elder also works full-time as an associate professor and chair of the library collection development department.

Elder is originally from Bucklin. She already has a bachelor of arts degree from Wichita State University and a master of library science degree from Emporia State University.

Elder began working at K-State after being employed for two years at the University of Nebraska.

"My brother was even in school here at that time," Elder said.

Her son was only 12 when she began art classes. He has since graduated from K-State and is now studying law in New York.

"It's amazing how she's been able to keep up the rhythm," Rosella Ogg, associate professor of art, said.

Elder said she became interested in art, painting and ceramics four or five years before she started the art program but had never studied it seriously.

"I realized if I didn't do something about following that interest, it would be too late," Elder said.

Elder said her interest in art was what made her want to take classes.

"Getting a degree was never my priority goal," Elder said. "Taking the classes was what I was interested in."

In her years of taking classes, Elder said she has enjoyed all of them.

"I enjoyed some more than others, but never had a class I didn't like," she said. "I can find something to learn in every class."

Despite being a nontraditional student, Ogg said Elder fits in well.

"It matters only in the best ways. She is very approachable to the students and mixes beautifully," Ogg said. "She just fits right in."

Elder said she had not decided whether she would continue taking classes or not.

"I know I'll continue making art, but I'm taking a semester off to decide," Elder said.

► ANIMAL SCIENCE

Professors developing vaccine for cattle

Rachelle Harkness
staff reporter

The high cost of beef production could be lowered in the near future.

T.G. Nagaraja, professor of animal sciences and industry, and M. Chengappa, professor of diagnostic medicine, have teamed together to create a vaccine against the cause of liver abscesses.

Liver abscesses increase the cost of beef production because they slow the weight gain of cattle and cause severe problems in the liver.

"It has always been a problem. The animals are being raised on grain because it's cheaper. In turn, the grain feeding causes too much acid, which produces damage," Nagaraja said.

A diet high in grain creates excess acid in an animal's stomach. The blood goes through the stomach, which actually causes the abscesses.

"This has been a problem for 30 or 40 years, but the problem has actually increased within the last 25 years. It creates a loss to the cattle producers. About $15-20 million are lost as a result of this problem," Nagaraja said.

The vaccine will be injected under the animal's skin. It has been produced and patented but must pass all tests in the field before it will be available for sales.

"If everything goes well, we look for the vaccine to be available in about a year's time," Nagaraja said.

Kelly Coulson, senior in animal sciences and industry, hopes to see positive results in this experiment.

"It would be a great breakthrough for the cattle raisers. It would cut down tremendously on the beef production as a whole, and I hope to see the results soon," Coulson said.

Michael Floyd, senior in animal sciences and industry, said he has always fed his cattle grain and never had trouble with it.

"You have to be careful when you feed the animals a lot of grain. You see it becoming more of a problem in feed lots, especially," Floyd said.

Cattle raisers use grain because of faster production. Cattle raised on grain take about 14-16 months to finish, as opposed to 4-5 years on grass alone.

"Using grain makes them have a better finish. It's a better quality of meat. You start running into problems when you feed them excess grain and not enough roughage," Floyd said.

Zook convicted of second-degree murder

■ Neither side happy with jury's verdict in murder trial

Associated Press

NEWTON — Christopher Zook stands convicted of second-degree murder, leaving neither prosecution nor defense completely satisfied with what was a compromise verdict.

Zook, 26, was charged with first-degree murder. He admitted shooting Thomas Zook, his stepfather and a Newton High School drama teacher, inside a grocery store in Newton on Sept. 8, 1994. The defense argued he should be convicted of the lesser charge of involuntary manslaughter on the grounds the killing was the result of years of sexual abuse by Thomas Zook.

Had Wednesday's verdict convicted Zook of first-degree murder, prosecutors had asked that he be subjected to the state's Hard 40 law that would have required sentencing to prison for at least 40 years. Second-degree murder has a maximum of 7 1/2 years, but prosecutors said they plan to ask the judge to depart from state sentencing guidelines.

Zook's sentencing was set for Feb. 13.

"I'm very, very disappointed," said assistant Attorney General Patrick

Peters, lead prosecutor in the case.

"I think the evidence showed this was a brutal, premeditated killing," Peters said before leaving Newton for his home in Kansas City. "I think it shows that this defendant is remorseless. I think it shows that this is a violent defendant who will be back in this community."

Chris Zook's mother, Phyllis McCune, said she thought the jurors had done the best job they could with the evidence they saw. She said she was disappointed jurors didn't have a chance to understand her son.

"Nobody knows my son the way I do," McCune said. "The worst part about it was hearing him called a liar. That was the hardest part."

The jury split 7-5 in favor of convicting Zook of premeditated first-degree murder but voted unanimously to convict him of the lesser charge of intentional second-degree murder.

Jurors also convicted Zook of aggravated battery for beating Thomas Zook, the man who had adopted him, with the shotgun, but found him not guilty of aggravated assault for pointing the gun at a teen-ager who tried to stop the beating.

Zook's defense attorney said he was disappointed for his client, but pleased with the verdict.

"The state had a very powerful case. And it's hard to overcome that. However, I think the jury decided it was appropriate to look at all the evidence, and I think they reached the right decision," Pedro Irigonegaray, of Topeka, said.

Thomas Zook's sister, Ann Stumbo, said she and her relatives were disappointed.

"I am stunned that a defense team can lie and manipulate and assassinate character and get by with it," she said before returning to her home in Minnesota.

Stumbo said she thought jurors would have returned a different verdict had they known the punishment for second-degree murder was much less than the 40-year sentence prosecutors were seeking.

She also said she was afraid Chris Zook would come after her family when he gets out of prison.

"I really fear for our family and for other people in the community," Stumbo said. "And that's the bottom line."

"I think the evidence showed this was a brutal, premeditated killing."

between 1971 and 1974.

Although some investigators say LaRette also killed males, Brede said he is sure LaRette only murdered women.

"In every instance I know about it, was always a woman," Brede said.

Brede, Raynor and Shawnee County Sheriff's deputy Marsha Bryant all interviewed LaRette extensively and estimate his killings to total between 12 and 16.

"He, on a couple of occasions, made explanations that he has killed 27-30 people and raped thousands more," Raynor said.

Technical center may become college

Nikola Zytkow

staff reporter

Students of the Manhattan Technical Center may soon be able to graduate with associate of applied science degrees.

If a proposal for the center to become a college is passed by the Kansas Legislature, the center will join the ranks of Wichita and Emporia vocational schools, which have converted to technical colleges in the last couple of years.

"I don't think there should be too many problems," Bill Berry, director of the center, said.

The application process was unanimously passed by the Kansas State Board of Education Nov. 15.

The Legislative Educational Planning Committee also voted unanimously in support of the conversion.

"To me, the benefits lie with students and employees," Berry said. "It's going to open some doors for people."

Potential employers would be more likely to hire students with an associate's degree from a college than a certificate based on a specific technical skill, Berry said.

The center offers a certificate and an associate of applied science degree through Cloud County Community College. The conversion would allow bargaining case for better conditions while being incarcerated, LaRette confessed to killing Miller.

LaRette served one three-year prison sentence before he was convicted for murder in 1980.

Brede said if an investigator took the homicides out, LaRette's criminal record would be spotty at best.

LaRette's crimes included indecent exposure, recipient of stolen property, disorderly conduct and possible burglary. But his sexual violence probably began at an early age, Brede said.

"He said he had thoughts about assaulting a woman at an early age, but he didn't have the strength to," Brede said.

LaRette, who was about 6 foot 4 inches and 200 pounds at the time of his death, must have been much younger, maybe 10, when he began to fantasize about assaulting women, Brede said.

Investigators have compared LaRette to Ted Bundy, Jeffrey Dahmer and John Wayne Gacy. But the numbers of victims LaRette had does not matter, Brede said.

Instead, people should focus on prevention and getting the investigations right.

Alvan Johnson, director of the Riley County Police Department, said there are thousands of unsolved murders everyday. Although most of these murders are not linked to serial killers, like LaRette, people should be careful.

"People like LaRette live in communities like Manhattan," he said.

Children's hospital real winner of contest

Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Somewhere, somebody hit it big — $1 million big — in a McDonald's peel-off game. But the winners Thursday were St. Jude Children's Research Hospital and its young cancer patients.

The winner of the McDonald's Monopoly contest took a game piece worth $1 million, put it in a plain white envelope and mailed it anonymously to the Memphis hospital.

St. Jude executive Richard Shadyac called it a holiday miracle.

Game rules bar the legal transfer of winning pieces from one person to another. But McDonald's agreed to make good on the payoff, which will be made in 20 annual payments of $50,000 each. Most of the thousands of donations St. Jude receives each year are $50 or less.

"The generosity is overwhelming," Trudy Kerwell of Ottawa, Ill., whose son Jacob, 2, is being treated for leukemia at St. Jude, said Thursday. "I would like to thank the person who did this. Without such generosity none of this would be here."

The hospital, an international leader in the treatment of catastrophic childhood diseases, depends heavily on donations.

CONGRESS GETS INVOLVED IN TEAM RELOCATION

The House Judiciary Committee chairman Henry Hyde, R-Ill., and Rep. Martin Hoke, R-Ohio, sent a letter to the NFL on Thursday asking the National Football League to wait on a vote to give the Cleveland Browns a new home field.

The two-paragraph correspondence asks the National Football League to wait a month so that Hyde's committee — which has the power to rewrite laws governing sports leagues — can hold a hearing on the subject of sports franchise relocation. Hyde told the league he expects to schedule a hearing no later than Feb. 15 and would like the NFL owners to vote on moving the Browns to Baltimore after that hearing, rather than on Jan. 17.

K-State to 'start from scratch'

Dan Lewerenz
sports editor

After a disappointing 69-68 loss to Ohio University Wednesday night, Wildcat women's basketball coach Brian Agler said there might be some shake-ups in the near future.

"We didn't practice (Thursday). And when we go in Friday, we're going to start from scratch," Agler said. "No one and nothing is guaranteed as far as starters."

After the Ohio game, Agler said he was concerned the team was not playing with the emotion it needed to win. And with a solid Michigan team (4-1 and playing at Nebraska tonight) coming in for a 2 p.m. tipoff Sunday in Bramlage Coliseum, Agler said the Cats (4-2) will have to find that emotion.

"I really don't know how we'll get it done. It's going to be a gut-check," Agler said.

"I know I don't sound really positive, but I was really disappointed with our effort Wednesday night," he said. "I was disappointed in the way we came out and got behind, and I was really disappointed in the way we lost our composure in the last few minutes."

Michigan and K-State have faced only one common opponent — Ohio. The Wolverines won by 12 points at Ohio. This year Michigan returns all five starters from a team that beat the Cats 62-53 in Ann Arbor last year.

"Michigan is exceptional in the post," Agler said. "And they have good athletes around the perimeter."

Junior post Andria Jones leads the Cats' attack coming into the Michigan game, averaging 16 points per game. Sophomore wing Brit Jacobson averages 15.8 points, and junior wing Missy Decker is averaging 10.2 points.

On the boards, Jacobson and Jones are each averaging six rebounds per game, and sophomore point guard Amanda Chamberlain grabs 4.5 boards per game. Chamberlain leads the Cats in assists with 3.8 per game, and Jones leads the team in steals with 1.8 per game.

After Sunday's game, the team will take finals week off before flying to San Juan, Puerto Rico, for the San Juan Shootout. The Cats will face Southwest Missouri State and Northwestern in pool play Dec. 16 and 18. They will then be paired against George Washington, Southern Methodist or the Puerto Rican National Team, based on pool outcomes.

When the Cats return home, they will face Missouri-Rolla Dec. 27 and Idaho Dec. 29. The time of the Idaho game has been moved from 7 p.m. to 5 p.m. to allow Cat fans to come to the game, then watch the Holiday Bowl on ESPN.

In another rematch from last year, the Cats will face Arkansas State Dec. 31. The Indians return four starters from a team K-State faced in tournament play in Washington, D.C.

"We played them last year, and they beat us in a close game," Agler said. "We know they'll be very quick, very athletic. And with four starters back, they'll be a good team."

After Arkansas State, the Cats venture into Big 8 play with home games against Missouri and No. 8 Colorado.

"Missouri is improved, and we always have a hard time playing them," Agler said. "And obviously, Colorado is exceptional."

K-State will hit the road to take on Iowa State and Nebraska before returning home for Oklahoma State and Oklahoma State.

"At this point, it's still early to try and say how we'll fit in the Big 8 picture," Agler said.

■ K-State men to play six home games, five on the road during winter break

Collegian Staff

Tonight, the K-State men's basketball team needs to rebound from a tough loss to Illinois Wednesday, in its 3 p.m. game at Washington.

Last season's contest with the Huskies was a thriller that the Wildcats won 63-62 in overtime at Bramlage Coliseum. The Cats never led in regulation and were down 13 points with less than 10 minutes left. Guard Elliot Hatcher was the savior for the Cats, hitting a three-point basket with 17 seconds left to tie up the game.

But the winter fun for the Cats does not end there, with home games against Michigan State, Morgan State and Xavier in a span of five days.

The Cats then hit Kansas City for a game against the Kangaroos of UMKC, a team the Cats beat last year by 32, 80-48, and out-rebounded by 26. Now-departed K-State forward Demond Davis led the Cats with 14 points.

Following those four games, the Cats travel to Oakland, Calif., for play in the Otis Spunkmeyer Classic. The Cats face Loyola in the first round of the tournament and then either California or Holy Cross in their next match.

The team then returns home to face

Wichita State on Jan. 2, a team that routed the Cats by 24 last season.

In that game the Cats shot a dismal 36.2 percent from the field and 11.1 percent from three-point range. Forward Tyrone Davis led the K-State effort with 19 points and six rebounds.

The Cats open Big 8 play on ESPN Jan. 6 against Iowa State, a team that swept the Cats last year. The Cats did not shoot more than 46 percent from the field in either game.

Following Iowa State, the Cats play host to Oklahoma on Jan. 9, a game that will be televised on ESPN2. The Cats pulled a split in the series against the Sooners last year, pulling out a 87-77 win at Bramlage Coliseum behind a 26-point, six-rebound effort from Davis, and the Sooners winning on their home court, 81-66.

The Sooners come to town led by last year's Big 8 player-of-the-year, Ryan Minor. K-State will then play its first Big 8 road game Jan. 13 at Colorado.

The Buffaloes swept the Cats last year by a combined score of 35 points. In last year's game in Boulder, Tyrone Davis kept the Cats close with 23 points and eight rebounds, but 35.9 shooting from the field killed the Cats.

▶ TRACK &amp; FIELD

Wildcats open indoor season today in Ahearn

Ryan O'Halloran
contributing writer

A dress rehearsal is what track coach Cliff Rovelto calls the opening meets this weekend for K-State.

"We're not at all ready for the season to start, and this meet is just another day in training," Rovelto said Thursday. "That's not to say there won't be good performances."

"You get a chance to see the younger kids. It gives them a dress rehearsal to know what to expect."

Both the men's and women's track teams open the indoor season today at Ahearn Field House. The KSU All-Comers Meet starts with the field events at 1:30 p.m. and the track events at 6 p.m. Friday, the men's KSU Winter Pentathlon starts at 9 a.m., with the women following at 9:30 a.m.

The women, who finished second at the Big 8 Indoors last season, are led by Karissa Owens, Belinda Hope, Wanita Dykstra and Angela Showalter.

Last season, Owens won the 55-meter and the 200-meter at the Big 8 Championships but will run the 55 and the 4x4 relay this weekend.

Rovelto said he wants the Cats to do as well as they did last year at this time.

"You kind of look at what they did at this time a year ago and compare it with that," he said. "In some cases, just because of them being stronger and a year more mature, you expect to see some improvement. But we haven't done things specifically for competition."

Hope took third in the 200 and won the 400 at the Big 8s, and finished fifth in the 400 at the NCAAAs.

"She's definitely, without question, further ahead compared to where she was last year, and she was pretty good last year," Rovelto said. "She's going to be someone to take note of."

As a team, Rovelto said the women are consistently good in every event.

"I think the women's team is pretty good, so it's hard to focus on a few (individuals)," he said. "The strength of the team is that we don't have glaring weaknesses."

On the men's side, K-State will compete short-handed with the decision to redshirt Ed Broxterman, Travis Livingston and Travis Renner.

"It's definitely going to impact how we're going to do in the conference meets, but the team will be better off (in the future) because of it," Rovelto said.

The move to redshirt the trio is based on the fact K-State is moving into the Big 12 next season and because of the scholarship restrictions.

"It's impossible to have a complete team, so year in and year out, you have to take some calculated risks and so you try to be patient with it and build the team up," Rovelto said.

Leaders on the men's team look to be Marshall Grayson in the long jump and Jeff Martin in the long sprints.

"We've got some young guys in the shot put that right now won't probably score high in the conference, but a year or two from now could be significant in the conference," Rovelto said.

This weekend will be used for a barometer of where K-State is leading up to its next action Jan. 13 in the Wildcat Pentathlon.

"We just want to see them have positive performances, be better than they were last year at this point," Rovelto said. "I know they have trained well, and I know they'll run fast."

▶ COLORADO STATE'S MYERS WINS THORPE AWARD

Colorado State strong safety Greg Myers was chosen as the nation's top defensive back Thursday night, edging K-State sophomore cornerback Chris Canty and Washington's Lawyer Milloy for the Jim Thorpe Award.

Myers, a first-team all-America selection by the Associated Press and the only second-year finalist, recorded three interceptions for the Rams this year, and his 83 tackles placed him second on the team.

Myers thanked a long list of coaches, teammates and family members for helping and inspiring his play. He said he loved the wide-open play of his conference, the Western Athletic Conference.

Asked if he could play offense, Myers said, "I'd love to. But the coaches don't want me to."

A senior who also returned kicks, Myers has the WAC record for career punt-return yards with 1,322. Myers averages 21 yards per return on kickoffs and 15.9 yards on punts — the latter a school record — and has scored three touchdowns this season.

A true student-athlete, Myers also took home the Honda Scholar-Athlete Award. He compiled a 3.7 grade-point average in pre-med in biological sciences.

He also coached his sister during her labor before delivering her baby.

"That was exciting," he said.

► CHEMISTRY

Professor studying in Antarctica

Chris Oakley
staff writer

Measuring volcanic gasses in Antarctica was the challenge presented to Charles Chaffin, adjunct faculty member in the chemistry department.

Now he is in the midst of a five-week expedition at McMurdo Station on Mt. Erebus in Antarctica, 13,000 feet above sea level.

Chaffin, who has communicated by e-mail, left for Antarctica Nov. 18 and will return sometime around Christmas.

He has been located in a hut at 11,000 feet above sea level. He has slept outdoors in tents.

"It will be just the instructor and I in the snow fields camping overnight. I will learn how to set up a tent and get a stove going in the extreme cold conditions. I'm starting to look forward to it. I actually hope it gets nasty. This is an excellent opportunity to get some training and experience that I could never afford — in time or money," Chaffin said.

Chaffin had to undergo survival training as a precaution for any emergency situation.

He said his survival training involved building a shelter.

"They actually call it Snowcraft because the main thing you do is learn how to build snow shelters anytime, anywhere, with anything. I slept in a snow cave I dug and covered with snow slabs I quarried with an ice saw. Besides learning how to build snow shelters, we learned how to set up polar tents and mountaineering tents and light stoves in cold weather conditions. They also taught us how to operate the various types of radios that are in use in Antarctica."

Chaffin's wife, Cheryl, said Charles has finished training and is at the site of the volcano, where he does not have the capabilities to communicate. She said he should be back before Christmas.

"He's been fine," she said. "It's a new experience for him."

Chaffin is using infrared spectroscopy technology methods to measure volcanic gasses. Some scientists theorize that the gasses emitted by a volcano might be an indicator of activity.

Chaffin, with a partner, uses equipment privately owned by Bill Fateley, professor of chemistry.

"We are the only people in the world that can do it," Fateley said. "This is really top-notch stuff."

Fateley developed the methods of using infrared spectroscopy instrumentation in the open atmosphere. He also serves as a technical adviser to Aerosurvey Inc., Chaffin and Marshall's company.

"I'm involved with them research-wise. This new technique that we have of remote sensing, they pretty well developed on their own," Fateley said.

Fateley said there were many practical applications for their technology.

"I think there is going to be a use for finding dead bodies. A body gives off a certain odor, and if a body has been hidden in a field, it will start a decomposition product. I think we will be able to find bodies that have been hidden in fields, or somewhere," he said.

Their technology will enable Chaffin to set up equipment away from the volcano's crater and monitor the activity that way.

Last year, Chaffin monitored a volcano in Sicily. He was then contacted by Philip Kyle, a geologist at New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology, the leader of the expedition to Mt. Erebus.

Chaffin said his experience has been interesting so far.

"The main thing I miss is my family. There is little contact possible here, but e-mail has been nice. After that, some of the other things I miss include being clean, darkness with a day/night cycle to help you remember what day it is and the smell of natural things. There are no trees, flowers, grass, etc., and the humidity is in the single digits," Chaffin said.

► CAMPUS PARKING

Life taxing for parking control officers

Heidi Evert
staff reporter

You walk up to your car after class, eyes zeroing in on the bright splotch of yellow on your windshield.

You snatch it up. The time the ticket was issued? Two minutes earlier. The ticket gets thrown in the car with disgust and a general curse is muttered to the parking gods.

Much ire about parking is directed toward those who hand out the bad news. However, a discussion with a parking control officer would tell you that they are just students doing their jobs.

Rafael Luna, fifth-year senior in geography and Latin American studies, has been a parking control officer (PCO) for three years.

"It is not a personal vendetta we have against people. We are just doing our jobs," Luna said.

The campus is split into four quarters, Luna said, with a person roaming each quarter giving tickets to those students who have expired meters, no permits or are illegally parked.

Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said Parking Services gives out on the average 250 tickets a week. Archer said the majority of those tickets are issued to people who fail to display parking permits.

"If they don't have parking permits, we make them pay for it," Luna said.

However, Luna said he usually is understanding if the car's owner shows up while he's writing out the ticket.

"Most of the time, if I'm writing a ticket and the owner shows up, I void it if they're nice to me," Luna said. "If they're not, fine, they owe 15 bucks."

Luna said people have eight working days to pay for the ticket. If they don't, there is a $5 late charge.

If people fail to pay for their first three tickets, the fourth ticket will result in a wheel lock.

"We have people who have been wheel locked several times, and they don't care," Luna said.

Sometimes Luna has to look into the car to see if the parking permit is on the dashboard.

"I've never seen anything unusual, but I always see old players in the front seat. And I think to myself, do you really want to have this stolen? Is that why your car is unlocked or your window is down?" Luna said.

► ATTORNEY GENERAL

Officials may search student rooms

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Attorney General Carla Stovall said officials of community colleges may conduct warrantless searches of on-campus student quarters, but only if they further an interest separate from the state's criminal code.

The non-binding opinion made public on Wednesday was requested by officials of Barton County Community College in Great Bend.

They wanted to know if college officials could search students' rooms for drugs, drug paraphernalia and alcohol. The opinion was written by Assistant Attorney General Richard D. Smith on Stovall's behalf. Stovall said warrantless searches are permissible if housing contracts permit them.

"Personnel ... may conduct a warrantless search of a student's living quarters ... for the purpose of furthering the educational functions of the community college, law enforcement involvement is minimal and the housing contract authorizes searches by school personnel," the opinion said.

► HOUSING

Habitat for Humanity home offered to KSU employee

Rachelle Harkness
staff reporter

The corner of Juliette Avenue and Riley Lane will be the new home of Manhattan's second Habitat for Humanity house recipient.

A K-State employee will have the opportunity to purchase the Habitat for Humanity house with an interest-free mortgage. An average three-bedroom home would cost $35,000.

The employee has three children and a niece who will be living with her in the newly constructed house.

Habitat for Humanity is an international volunteer organization that seeks to help families in poverty housing.

Volunteer labor and donations of money and materials make it possible for Habitat for Humanity to build homes for selected families.

The Manhattan chapter began meeting in 1993 after students began a chapter at K-State.

"The students have an excellent chapter. Our local chapter became official in February of 1995," said

Marcia Schuley, chair of the development committee.

The Manhattan chapter contributes 10 percent of the money collected to Habitat projects worldwide.

"For every house built in the United States, three can be built abroad," Schuley said.

Through advertisements and word of mouth, the residents of Manhattan will be alerted to know when they are eligible to apply for the next Habitat project.

"Seven families applied last time. We hope to have more next time," said Ruth Miller, assistant professor of electrical engineering.

Several organizations and individuals have called to offer their time in building the homes. Also, part of the homeowners responsibility is contributing time toward their new home.

"The first home was awarded to Becky Siders. She was out there all the time. She contributed 210 hours of labor," Schuley said.

Miller is chair of the family selection committee, which selects applicants based on need, ability to pay and willingness to partner, Miller said.

Applying for the home requires filling out lengthy applications. The applicant must also provide references, and a home visit is done by the committee.

The family's income must be at least $10,000 a year. The maximum amount is just under what the family would need to be able to get a loan through a bank.

"The only important thing is we have to make sure the assistance they are receiving won't go away if they own a home," Miller said.

► PEACEKEEPING MISSION

Area soldier among first to land in Bosnia

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Todd Eichmann wanted to comfort his mother when he telephoned from Germany to say he'd be among the first American troops assigned to a United Nations peacekeeping mission in Bosnia. The comfort mission failed.

"He was mainly just trying to reassure me," Janice Webb of suburban Independence recalled Monday. "He told me he had his weapons ready. He said, 'I have my M-16 (rifle) and my 9mm (pistol) ready.' I said, 'That's not really what I want to hear.'"

Eichmann, a sergeant and Army communications specialist, was among the first U.S. soldiers deployed for the mission to the former Yugoslavia.

Eichmann, 24, arrived in Sarajevo on Monday along with about two dozen NATO troops. The early arrivals are to prepare for a 60,000-strong NATO peacekeeping force in Bosnia.

Eichmann had phoned his mother from a base at Augsburg, Germany, on Saturday night to tell her he was going to Bosnia.

He was unable to reach his sisters, Michele, 31, and Melissa, 29.

In a calm, quiet tone, Webb told his mother he believed the mission was overdue. His mother agreed.

"I think the mission in general has come way too late. They should have done this even two years ago and not let it get as far as it's gotten," Webb said.

"Hopefully, someone will get something settled and get on the right track. You'd like for us to win one."

But that's merely an unemotional opinion on U.S. foreign policy, she said. "That's not the mother talking,"

Webb said. "The mother talking says 'No,' because I don't want my son there. He probably wouldn't like to hear me say that."

Webb, 53, had not been expecting her only son home for Christmas. He has been stationed in Germany for three years. He is going through a divorce and has no children, she said.

"It's going to be worse this year knowing where he is," she said. "It was bad enough just knowing he was away from home."

SAFETY

Holidays also bring hazards

Lights, candles some of many holiday hazards

Nicole Kirby
staff reporter

'Tis the season to deck the halls, but be careful.

There are many hazards associated with holiday decorations like Christmas lights and Menorah candles. One of the most dangerous staples of the season is the Christmas tree.

"With Christmas trees, if you have a live tree that you picked up at a lot, make sure you cut an inch off the bottom at a diagonal because if they sit for a while, they heal up, and they can't absorb water," Donald Francis, Manhattan fire marshal, said. "Make sure to keep it watered because it can dry out, which makes it very easy to catch fire to."

Putting lights on a tree increases the risk of it catching fire, especially if the light cords are old and have frayed patches.

"Christmas trees burn very fast, and it wouldn't take very long to engulf the room," Francis said.

All strands of holiday lights need to be checked for fraying and should not share an extension cord with more than two other strands.

"You shouldn't overload your electrical outlets, and you should make sure that all the cords are well-insulated so that there isn't a short," Ronnie Grice, director of the K-State Police, said.

Because there is a high risk for fires during the holidays, all necessary precautions should be taken for house decorating.

"Check the smoke detector to make sure that it works, and check your carbon-monoxide detector. If you don't have one, they make very good gifts. This time of year is a good time to think about that sort of thing," said Jan Stegelman, coordinator for Kansas Safe Kids.

Holiday safety precautions

The Kansas Safe Kids Coalition lists a number of precautions to take with decorating.

- Decorate with UL-approved lights and cords.
- Turn off the tree lights when you go to bed or leave the house.
- Do not place candles near draperies or anything that might easily catch fire.
- Choose the freshest tree you can find.
- Keep the tree watered.
- Secure the tree by using a wide-based stand.
- Dispose of the tree right after the holidays.
- Don't burn Christmas tree branches, treated wood or wrapping paper in the fireplace.
- Consider a fire-resistant artificial tree.
- Avoid artificial snow spray, which can irritate lungs.

Source: Kansas Safe Kids Coalition

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

If you have a fireplace, use a screen, and don't place the tree near it. "If you like to hang stockings in front of the fireplace, make sure they're off the side so they don't dry out and catch fire," Francis said.

Precautions like this can prevent the holiday from going up in flames.

ACADEMICS

Students nominated for Truman scholarships

Nicole Kirby
staff reporter

K-State has finalized its four nominations for the Truman scholarships.

Laura Bathurst, junior in anthropology and Spanish; Jason Cole, senior in philosophy; Shante Moore, senior in political science; and Liz Ring, senior in history, are competing for a $30,000 scholarship.

"It's a scholarship for graduate school for a student who's interested in public service," Ring said.

Bathurst, Cole and Moore are competing for the Kansas scholarship, while Ring is an out-of-state nominee.

"I'm nominated by K-State, but if I was to win, I would win for the state of Nebraska," Ring said.

Applicable for any graduate school program in the country, the scholarship is given to one person from each state and awarded to students who show leadership ability, a desire to be in public service and a desire to continue their education.

The four students applied to a selections committee at K-State and were interviewed for the nominations. Once chosen, they began to fill out the applications for the finals.

"We started working with Nancy Twiss on essays and spending hours and hours in the dean's office the night before it was due," Bathurst said. "I don't think I've ever spent that much time on an application in my life. But it was worth it even if I go no further because it helped me evaluate my life and where I want to go."

Cole also said the application process was valuable.

"Even if I don't win, it's been a good experience. It's helped me realize some direction, it's helped me see what I've done so far, and it made me realize how much stamina I have."

The application process required a memo to someone in political office about some aspect of public policy.

"I wrote mine to Attorney General Janet Reno about the enforcement of the National Voter Registration Act," Ring said.

Bathurst wrote her essay to Senate majority leader Bob Dole, R-Kan.

"It was on the maquiladoras, which is the name given to the factories right across the border between Mexico and the United States. About 29 years ago, they established a duty-free zone there, and the conditions there are atrocious.

"The workers are exploited, and the waste is not disposed of in an environmentally sound manner. I wrote Bob Dole a memo proposing that he support Border XXI, which is funded by the EPA. These grants support projects to change the situation by putting in water-treatment plants, et cetera."

Cole's essay similarly focused on corporate exploitation of workers in underdeveloped countries and was written to President Clinton.

If he were to win the scholarship, Cole said he wants to study this situation.

"I'm looking at both Georgetown and Syracuse and focusing on economics of developing countries," he said. "I've got a strong interest in international politics, and I want to do something in that field."

Bathurst said she wanted to attend the University of California at Berkeley and obtain a doctorate in cultural anthropology.

"I would like to be a professor of political anthropology and be active in the political arena," she said. "I would like to look at the policy-making process and see what has to be done so that traditionally less powerful groups can have access to the process."

Ring said she also knew where she would like to attend graduate school and what she wants to do with her education.

"I'd probably go back to Georgetown. I went there this summer, and I really liked it. I'd like to do something with public affairs and public policy that deals with women and children. I'd like to lobby for something like the Children's Defense Fund," Ring said.

Fall commencement planned for Saturday

Rich Peffley
staff reporter

This weekend's commencement exercises will mark the end of more than 1,000 college careers.

There will be no all-University commencement this year because of the growing size of fall graduating classes. Instead, five separate exercises have been planned.

More than 10,000 guests are expected to attend the commencement exercises Saturday.

"We just continue to grow each year," Vice Provost Beth Unger said. "It astounds us."

Unger noted two reasons for the increased graduation numbers.

"Each year, more and more students are participating in the services," Unger said. "And each year, more and more family and friends attend the services."

Commencement weekend begins Friday with the conferral of doctoral and master's degrees for the Graduate School. The ceremony will start at 2 p.m. in McCain Auditorium. A reception for the graduates will immediately follow the ceremony in the lobby of McCain Auditorium.

Undergraduate degrees will be conferred on Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum. The College of Arts and Sciences is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m., followed by the colleges of Agriculture and

TV BROADCAST

Relatives and friends who cannot attend Saturday's commencement ceremonies can watch a live televised broadcast.

Cable viewers can watch the ceremonies at 2 p.m. on Channel 19.

Non-cable subscribers can watch the ceremonies at 2 p.m. on Channel 21 or in the Union Little Theatre.

Education at 11 a.m.

The colleges of Engineering and Technology are scheduled for 1:30 p.m. followed by Human Ecology and Business Administration at 3:30 p.m.

A special commencement buffet will be served from 11:15 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. Saturday in the Bluemont Room in the K-State Student Union.

The menu will include carved roast beef, baked chicken with wild rice, a salad bar and dessert. The cost is $7, and tickets can be purchased in advance or at the door. Reservations for groups larger than eight are encouraged and can be made by calling (913) 532-6580.

► KSU FOUNDATION

Private donations benefit KSU

■ KSU Foundation raises $20 million per fiscal year

Jamie Willey
staff reporter

The KSU Foundation raises more than $20 million per fiscal year in donations to benefit the University, Gordon Dowell, KSU Foundation director of publications, said.

The money, collected from private donations of alumni and friends of the University, supports K-State in many forms, Dowell said.

"Most of the money is designated by donors as to where it is going to go," Dowell said.

Funds have been donated to Farrell Library construction, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, Bramlage Coliseum and football improvements, including the field, press box and indoor training facility, Dowell said.

The Foundation raised $20,401,165 during the fiscal year of 1995 and received a rate of return on investments of 13.3 percent, Jim Buchheister, Foundation controller, said.

The foundation's assets are now worth more than $147 million, which is almost $13 million more than it was worth 10 years ago, he said.

Dowell said K-State's assets include a variety of stocks bonds, and real estate.

"One of the things we're most proud of is the percent of alumni that support their alma mater. K-State has been the perennial leader in the Big 8 in the percentage of alumni that support their school," Dowell said.

Dowell said 27 percent of K-State alumni regularly give money to the foundation in support of K-State. He said the 27 percent ranks in the top 10 of all universities in the nation.

"We start with a very solid base of 27 percent of alumni annually giving to K-State. Secondly, we have a very involved group of volunteers," Buchheister said.

Kirk Baughan, development officer, said K-State relies on many people donating to the Foundation instead of a few who give $10-15 million donations.

"We're not dependent on a few, we're dependent on many to participate each year," Baughan said.

Buchheister said the Foundation has been able to raise a large amount of money in the last few years because it began the Essential Edge Campaign in 1988 to increase contributions from alumni.

The campaign was started with the goal of having contributors pledge an amount of money that they will give within five years, he said.

"The reason people gave like they did is because they see the University is on a very solid path in academics as well as in athletics," Baughan said.

Buchheister said the Foundation has raised about $20 million each year since 1992. He said the Essential Edge Campaign ended in 1993, but a new campaign to raise money for scholarships is about to get under way.

The new campaign is not expected to raise as much money as the Essential Edge Campaign, but the money raised will go exclusively to scholarships for K-State students. The new campaign will begin within a year or two, Baughan said.

Dowell said a lot of money is raised by the Foundation's annual telethon each year. The telethon raised $826,083 in contributions in February 1995. He said the large amount of money raised by the telethon was possible because of the large amount of students who participated in the event.

Dowell said the telethon is the world's largest of its kind. He said other universities do not raise as much in their telethons because they do not have the same volunteer support base as K-State.

Investments have been another money-raising avenue for the Foundation.

Buchheister said the Foundation was able to get a high rate of return on its investments because it has a dedicated investment committee made up of K-State graduates that receive advice from market consultants.

"Basically, we've been able to follow what the market has been doing," Buchheister said.

The Foundation only received a rate of return of 2.91 percent last year, but Buchheister said the low rate was due to a poor investment market in 1994. The rate of return has been high enough in other years to balance the low rate of last year, he said.

The amount of contributions the Foundation receives each year will probably increase or remain stable within the years to come, Buchheister said.

► OBITUARY

City government pioneer, 1916 KSAC graduate dies

Associated Press

TOPEKA — John G. Stutz, originator of Kansas' cash basis law and a pioneer in municipal management, died Thursday at Brewster Place, a Topeka retirement community where he and his wife had lived in recent years. He was 102.

Cremation was planned with a memorial service later, a family spokeswoman said.

Stutz was executive director of the League of Kansas Municipalities from 1920 to 1955. He helped found the National League of Cities and the U.S. Conference of Mayors and once taught public administration at the University of Kansas.

He was the National League of Cities' executive director in 1924-31 and was an early official of the International City Management Association and the International Union of Local Authorities.

He was executive director of the state Department of Social Welfare under Gov. Alf M. Landon in 1933-37 and drafted what became the state cash basis law for Landon. The law prohibits local units of government from borrowing money to finance their operations.

Stutz also served as executive director of the Kansas Emergency Relief Committee under Gov. Harry Woodring in 1932, the height of the Great Depression.

Stutz was born Jan. 1, 1893, in a dugout sod house in Ness County, about five miles from Ute, the first of 11 children of pioneer farmers Valentine and Susan Stutz.

He earned his diploma from Kansas State Agricultural College in Manhattan in 1916, served during World War I as an artillery training officer, and graduated from the University of Chicago in 1920. He taught municipal government and public administration at KU and became executive director of the League of Kansas Municipalities.

'Kids' drama rocks nation with realism

contributing writer

KIDS
In Union Forum Hall
Friday at 7 and 9 p.m.
Saturday at 7 p.m.

Find out what all the controversy is about at 7 or 9 tonight and Saturday night in Union Forum Hall, when Union Program Council presents "Kids," the heavily criticized drama that depicts a day in the life of a group of New York teen-agers.

The screenwriter, Harmony Korine, was a high-school dropout and amateur writer among the other skaters frequenting Washington Square Park. He was only 19 when he wrote the provocative screenplay.

Despite the public debate and outrage the movie has stirred, Korine's approach in writing the movie was simplistic, almost documentary in style.

"It's just about what happens in one day with these kids — New York City street kids," Korine said.

The movie has been embraced as a disturbingly honest representation of contemporary issues that inner-city youth face every day. Critics have blasted it, saying its jolting taboos are an exaggeration of the common problems facing teen-agers.

The disruptive nature of the truth preserved in the movie resulted in an NC-17 rating has people talking, including MTV music news reporter Kurt Loder.

"There is no nudity in this film, no graphic sex and just one fight scene — and yet so powerful is the movie's execution that the anonymous raters of the Motion Picture Association of America would only offer 'Kids' an NC-17 rating, traditionally the kiss of commercial death," Loder said. "Meaning that the audience that would most appreciate it, kids themselves, wouldn't see it."

Raw exposure to the accessibility and excessive abuse of drugs and sex among young people, laced with powerfully authentic dialogue that has aroused intense emotional friction.

The director of "Kids," Larry Clark, said his eyes were opened by the film as well.

"Ain't no one using condoms, man. I know you kids ain't using condoms out there," Clark said. "You can play with fire, but you're going to get the bill."

"Maybe it will start a dialogue," he said. "That would be good between parents and their kids."

The movie received two thumbs up from Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert's "At the Movies" when it was first released in August.

"The movie paints a tragic picture of mindless, aimless, violent and destructive behavior," Ebert said. "At the same time, it carries a message that wouldn't get across in a more compromised film."

"By living only for today, all of these kids are running the chance of losing all their tomorrows."

FACULTY SENATE

Teacher evaluation format might change

Nikola Zytow
staff reporter

Guidelines for teacher evaluations could become more strict if Faculty Senate passes proposed changes in the faculty handbook on Dec. 12.

In an attempt to weed out chronic underachievers in academia, the Kansas Board of Regents made several suggestions to the faculty senates of universities at regent schools.

The board encouraged the University to adopt a system using multiple sources of information when evaluating faculty.

For instance, instead of just using the standard teacher evaluations, departments could also use peer evaluations, examinations and syllabi in a portfolio reflecting the performance of a faculty member.

Peers are often in the best position to evaluate one another's performance, according to a board document.

Faculty evaluations are done departmentally, and individual departments decide whether to adopt the peer-evaluation system.

To combat chronic underachievement, the board also suggested a system in which departments would set up minimum standards for its tenured faculty.

Faculty members who fail to meet these requirements and receive three negative evaluations within a period of four years could be dismissed at the discretion of the respective dean.

At present, chronic underachievement is not grounds for dismissal, said Larry Glasgow, faculty senator from chemical engineering.

"The Board of Regents is concerned with increased accountability," he said. Discussions could result in a more uniform measuring stick.

"One of the things that is self-evident is there would obviously be some inconsistencies," Glasgow said of the current system. Different departments weigh teaching, research and service differently.

"This is a very difficult issue," Glasgow said, adding that it's hard to compare teacher performance in the fine arts department versus the chemical engineering department.

"In terms of performance, it's like comparing apples and oranges," he said. Even teacher evaluations by students are optional, though strongly suggested by the faculty handbook.

Victoria Clegg, director of educational advancement, said that under University policy, departments are encouraged to use student evaluations. Whether they do depends on the department.

Glasgow said he predicted some fiery discussion concerning this topic.

"Everyone will want to know how it will affect them," Jim Dubois, faculty senator from architecture, said.

"One of the criteria the Board of Regents suggests for identifying chronic underachievers doesn't work very well," Glasgow said.

He referred to the 0-1 percent raise notion, which states faculty who receive only a 0-1-percent raise in a period of three years are not performing up to standard, Glasgow said.

"The kind of effort it would take to do such a search would be inefficient," he said.

Glasgow said he was not sure exactly how effective, if at all, the proposed changes would be.

Margaret Conrow, faculty senator from the English department, agreed and said the handbook already discussed many faculty-evaluation issues.

"The Faculty Affairs Committee recommended it, but I'm not sure we're wholeheartedly behind it," Conrow said.

"I'm not sure there's such a thing as a chronic underachiever at K-State," she said.

Her statement is a reflection of a survey done by K-State's Budget Office.

The office conducted a survey for the regents trying to find out how many professors received a salary increase of 0 to nine-tenths of a percent within the 1993, '94, and '95 fiscal year periods.

Results of the survey showed that not one professor fit this category, said John Struve, director of the budget office.

Conrow said the board's suggestion to identify chronic underachievers would result in a tremendous bureaucratic overhead.

"It will be a tremendous amount of time spent for an extremely small amount of people, if anybody," Conrow said.

"It's definitely not in the direction of being more efficient," she said. "It's also considered by many people to be an interference with freedom of tenure."

According to the faculty handbook, faculty can be recommended for dismissal for such reasons as professional incompetence, unethical behavior and persistent violation of University rules.

Conrow said K-State was not the only university targeted with these suggestions. She said K-State, unlike some other universities, already has a strong faculty-evaluation system.

"Some universities depend only on student evaluations," she said.

It is for these schools that Conrow said she thought the board's suggestions are geared toward.

Peter Zoller, associate vice president of academic affairs at Wichita State University, said the faculty senate at Wichita is also in the process of deliberating on regents' suggestions concerning chronic underachievement. Wichita's system of faculty evaluation is similar to K-State's.

"Some departments use peer evaluations, but they are not used as often as student surveys," Zoller said.

Wichita has a dismissal-for-cause policy similar to K-State's.

This policy could potentially be implemented against both tenured and non-tenured professors.

Zoller said Wichita strongly encouraged all departments to use multiple sources in evaluating faculty. He said evaluation methods varied among departments.

The measure could be discussed, tabled, passed or rejected at the Senate meeting Tuesday.

DIRECTOR

Springer said Fink believed in giving feedback, whether good and bad. He also is concerned with getting feedback from students.

"He tries to get us to make our own decisions. Like at our meetings — he just sits back and lets me run it the way I see fit," Springer said. "Then at the end of the meeting, he gives us his input."

Fink has office hours when residents can come to him for help.

"I'm not on duty all day, but I'm available anytime that I am in the building," Fink said.

"I don't mind if students want to talk in the evening time or they want to just drop by the apartment. I welcome that opportunity, and I encourage it, but like anybody, I am free to leave for the weekend to go fishing or whatever."

Fink and his wife, Kelley, live in a director's apartment in Van Zile.

Kelley, Interim Coordinator for the Office of Student and Activities, said she did not have a problem with living on campus. She said she didn't mind when students stopped by because they respect the fact that she and her husband need their space.

"They allow us to have our privacy, when we want it, as long as we are up front with them about what our expectations are of them, and students respect that a great deal," Kelley said.

Kelley also said she liked living on campus because it allowed her to interact with students on a more personal level.

"Living on campus has provided me an opportunity to have exposure with students in a very unique way that most administrators or staff members on campus do not have," she said.

"I not only get to see them when they come into my job, but I get to interact with them outside of work or the classroom."

Andy Fink said he did not mind living on campus, but it would be nice if the couple could have its own place. He said that because he is married, it would be nice to have more privacy.

"Also, having a home away from work would create a better balance in my life," he said. "Right now, I live and work in the same place, and sometimes it is hard to separate the two."

On top of his many tasks, Fink helps teach and coordinate the class called guidance for the paraprofessional. This course is offered to anyone, but Housing and Dining requires resident and student assistants to take the class.

"The class is a leadership development course with a strong focus on collaborative and experiential learning," Fink said. "This means that the students work and experience things together."

Fink said that while working for Housing and Dining, he has received two awards for his leadership skills in advising and professionalism.

He was appointed adviser of the year from the Midwest Affiliate of College and University Residence Halls. He was also offered a $500 scholarship from the Association of College and University Housing Officers-Internations. The money was used to pay for his weekend stay for the ACUHO-I conference.

Going home

by Shana Newell

The upcoming trip across the Rocky Mountains to San Diego for K-State quarterback Matt Miller will mean much more than his last football game as a K-State Wildcat. It will mean a trip home.

Having attended Mt. Carmel high school in San Diego, Miller said he is excited about the opportunity to return to his hometown and play in front of his family, friends and old coaches.

"It's a great feeling going back there," Miller said. "I consider San Diego my home."

Miller didn't wait until he reached Wildcat land to begin breaking records. The 1990 Mt. Carmel graduate was named the California High School Amateur Athlete of the Year that year after he broke every passing record in the books at Mt. Carmel. He also threw for 15 touchdowns and more than 2,300 yards his senior year, with only three interceptions.

"It's been two and a half years since I've been back there," Miller said.

Cats make it 3 in a row

by Ryan O'Halloran

This bowl thing is becoming old hat for K-State. But it's winning bowl games that Wildcat players and coaches want to become a yearly occurrence.

"There's still the bowl excitement, but it's more expected now," wide receiver Tyson Schwieger said. "The first year (1993 Cooper Bowl), we were excited we finally made a bowl. Now, it's becoming more of a routine."

The routine started two years ago with a 52-14 win over Wyoming to give K-State its first-ever bowl victory.

But last year, anything that could go wrong did against Boston College in the Aloha Bowl. The offense produced only 124 yards of total offense, and quarterback Chad May was sacked eight times.

Being defeated 12-7 by the Eagles sent the Cats back to reality in preparation for the Dec. 29 Holiday Bowl against Colorado State (8 p.m., ESPN).

Wildcats vs. Rams on the field

K-State vs. Colorado State — this year's Holiday Bowl will showcase two teams that have only recently come into football prominence.

Both are feared in their respective conferences for their defensive prowess, and both have surprisingly effective offenses after suffering key personnel losses last year.

With the Wildcats heading into the biggest bowl game in school history, Collegian sportswriters Ryan O'Halloran and Shane McCormick have broken down both teams.

COLORADO STATE

Quarterback

Coach Sonny Lubick had tough shoes to fill when Anthony Hill, who threw for 2,552 yards and 16 touchdowns last season, graduated. Junior college transfer Daren Wilkinson started five of the first six games. But sophomore Moses Moreno started the last two games — wins over Hawaii and San Diego State. Unlike Matt Miller, don't look for either Wilkinson or Moreno to run the ball. They've combined for only 18 rushes this season.

Running Backs

With a two-back set, the Rams

Rogowski and Shull have missed zero starts this season. But they've given up almost three sacks a game this season.

Defensive Line

Two words: Brady Smith. The six-foot-six, 255-pound right end recorded 19 — yes, 19 — sacks this season while making 65 tackles, 19 of those for losses. If K-State can stop Smith from pressuring Miller, its chances for victory are excellent.

Linebackers

Senior Karl Ballard led the Rams with 128 tackles this season, includwith 1,332 yards. Against SDSU, Myers returned a punt 84 yards for his third score of the season and broke a CSU record with a punt-return average of 15.9 yards. Washington is averaging 21 yards per kickoff return, while punter Matt McDougal recorded 13 punts inside the 20-yard line and hitting seven-of-15 field goals.

Intangibles

Both teams feel they have something to prove after their respective bowl debacles of a year ago. The Rams lost to Michigan in the Holiday Bowl 24-14, while the Cats were downed by Boston College 12-6.

KANSAS STATE

Quarterback

Before the season started, many were skeptical of Matt Miller's ability as a starting quarterback. The skeptics are now few and far between. All Miller has done is pass for 2,043 yards and a Big 8 record 22 touchdowns. But what makes Miller a second-team all-Big 8 performer is his ability to run the ball. Miller has rushed for 309 yards and a school-record eight touchdowns.

Running Back

Running by committee — that best describes K-State's running game. Throughout the year, Eric Hickson and Mike Lawrence have shared the running duties. Hickson has carried the ball 158 times for 816 yards and has proven to be a threat catching the ball out of the backfield, averaging more than 12 yards a catch. Lawrence has carried the ball 143 times for 599 yards. While senior fullback Dederick Kelly has not had the opportunity to rush the ball many times this year, he has established himself as one of the premier blocking backs in the country.

Receivers

When people think of K-State's wide receivers, the first name that comes to mind is Kevin Lockett. And why not? Lockett has caught 56 balls for 797 yards and 13 touchdowns, earning him first-team Big Eight honors and honorable-mention selection to the United Press International all-America squad. But this receiving corps is not a one-man show. Senior Mitch Running earned himself a second-team Big Eight selection by the AP and coaches. Running caught 51 balls for 756 yards and seven touchdowns. Senior Tyson Schwiager, a 1994 first-team All-Big Eight selection, caught 39 balls this season for 438 yards. Although senior tight end Brian Lojka has had only 11 receptions, four of those have gone for touchdowns.

Offensive Line

The K-State offensive line has both experience and depth going. The line is anchored by Chris Oltmanns, Kendyl Jacox, Ross Greenwood, Jason Johnson and Scott Heun. Redshirt freshman Ryan Young, or as his teammates call him, "Shaq," and redshirt freshman Jeremy Martin have rotated into the offensive line this year. Jacox has been the key for the offensive line this season. He has played both offensive guards, some work at offensive tackle, and at the center position this season.

Defensive Line

The defensive line is an experienced group. All but one, Nyle Wiren, are seniors. The defensive line is led by senior defensive tackle Tim Colston. Colston led the line with 81 tackles and seven sacks. This effort was enough for Colston to be chosen for second-team All American by the AP. Having a quiet but successful year was senior defensive end Dirk Ochs. Ochs led the team with 11 quarterback sacks.

MIKE WELCH/Collegian

Chris Canty records his eighth interception of the season against Colorado, tying him for first in the nation. Canty is the first Wildcat to make the AP's first team all-America as a sophomore.

Ochs was selected as a second-team, All Big Eight performer this season. Senior Ray Eagle and junior Nyle Wiren combined for 14 quarterback sacks this season.

Linebackers

Senior Percell Gaskins led the cats with 97 tackles this season. Gaskins also recorded two quarterback sacks and one interception this season. Gaskins was a third-team AP all-American, one of 10 semifinalists for the Butkus Award, and one of seven finalists for Football News Defensive Player of the Year. David Damon was fourth on the team with 81 tackles. Behind him were linebackers DeShawn Fogle and Travis Ochs, with 73 tackles. Ochs' performance landed him the Defensive Freshman of the Year award.

Secondary

The secondary was led by first-team all-American Chris Canty. Canty recorded eight interceptions, including two returned for touchdowns. Canty can also stop the run, recording 43 tackles this season. Three of those were for losses from his cornerback position. At the other corner is Joe Gordon, a Big-Eight first team selection by the Football News. Gordon recorded 48 tackles and broke up 13 passes. At free safety, Mario Smith was known for his big hitting this season. Smith was second on the team with 95 tackles. Strong safety Chuck Marlowe was third on the team with 85 tackles, including four for losses.

Special Teams

Running set a K-State record for season punt-return yardage with 370 yards this season, averaging 10.9 yards a return. Junior Jimmy Dean averaged 20.8 yards per kickoff return this season. James Garcia took over the punting duties this season, averaging 41.5 yards per punt, including a season-long 58 yards against Colorado. Martin Gramatica connected on seven-of-10 field goals.

Intangibles

If K-State can produce a 100-yard rusher in this game, the chances for a victory look very good. In the 1990s, K-State is 27-3 when it produces a 100-yard rusher. And don't be surprised to see the Cats going for it on fourth down during the game — K-State is an incredible 22-of-28 on fourth-down conversions this season.

have had heavy production from two backs in each game this season. E. J. Watson has run for 885 yards, and freshman Damon Washington has run for 600 yards. The Rams run the ball an average of 41 times a game and pass it around 30 times a game.

Receivers

The Rams have a balanced attack, with Paul Turner leading the way with 41 catches for 678 yards and nine touchdowns. Darrell Ballard and Jeremy Calhoun have combined for more than 800 yards receiving. But don't expect Moreno to go to his tight end. Justin Shull has caught only 11 passes all season.

Offensive Line

The Colorado State offensive line is both experienced and durable. Anchored by senior Brandon Evans, the group of James Cregg, Steve Dundee, Todd Peterson, Mark ing 23 stops against Air Force and 20 stops the next week against BYU. Willie Taylor was third on the team with 67 tackles, while Nate Kvamme was fifth with 61 stops.

Secondary

Probably the best in the WAC, the Rams' Greg Myers is an Associated Press, first-team all-American and Jim Thorpe Award winner, and Ray Jackson was named All-WAC this season. Jackson is the Rams' best cover man, intercepting five passes (18 for his career) and breaking up 11 more. Strong safety Myers had three picks and was second on the team with 83 tackles. As a unit, the Rams intercepted 18 passes this season, with Steve Standifer picking four and Mack Craft three.

Special Teams

BOWL

"You realize how important a bowl game is," center Jason Johnson said. "The first year we won the Cooper Bowl, and it meant a lot to our team. And you didn't realize how special that win was until last year's loss in the Aloha Bowl. So for me especially, I'm definitely more focused than I was last year. This game means a lot to me personally."

The game also means a lot to the Rams. Last season, Colorado State, in the words of CSU athletic director Tom Jurich, was "last year's Northwestern," after a dream 10-1 regular season. But in the Holiday Bowl, the WAC champs lost to Michigan 24-14.

"Now that we're going out for the second time, we'll be more focused," Rams coach Sonny Lubick said.

K-State had its sights set on the Cotton Bowl, but a season-ending 27-17 loss to Colorado squashed those hopes. Colorado State meanwhile had been talking to the Copper and Independence Bowls, but beat San Diego State 24-13 to win the tie-breaker and its second-straight Holiday berth.

"You could tell on the plane flying out that our guys really wanted to win that game badly," Lubick said of the SDSU game.

"The team did not surprise me, but it was very satisfying to see how well they played."

For each team to avoid its second-straight bowl loss, they both will need to put points on the board, but touchdowns could be at a premium.

K-State's defensive unit was the best in the nation this season, recording three shutouts and three other games in which it allowed 10 or fewer points. The Cats allowed just 250.8 yards of total defense a game, the lowest in the Big 8 since Oklahoma's 208.1 mark in 1987. They also finished second in scoring defense (13.2), 13th in pass efficiency defense and 15th in rushing defense.

"Anytime you can lead the nation in a positive category — especially when it's a cumulative category — it's positive," Snyder said.

"I got a plaque hidden someplace I wouldn't dare let anybody have, and I sure wouldn't post it — we led the nation in pass defense in 1989, because everyone ran on us for a zillion yards. They called it foolish when they threw the ball."

K-State fans know about Chris Canty (first-team All-America with eight interceptions), Percell Gaskins (third-team all-America with a team-leading 97 tackles) and Tim Colston (second-team all-America and Big 8 Defensive Player of the Year with 81 stops and seven sacks).

But Colorado State also is a stingy defense unit, with solid players in all areas. Defensive end Brady Smith set a school record with 15 sacks during the season; linebacker Karl Ballard had 128 tackles; and cornerback Ray Jackson had eight interceptions to garner first-team All-WAC honors along with Greg Myers, who won the Thorpe Award as the nation's best defensive back.

"They're good on both sides of the ball," Snyder said. "But their emphasis is on the defensive side. They have allowed themselves, based on the tapes I've seen, a chance to be successful because they have played good defense."

Smith will be the key for the Rams' pass rush, and CSU will dare K-State to throw against its corners, which will allow the Rams' defensive line make bull-rushes at quarterback Matt Miller.

"The schemes they do are a little different than what we're used to seeing," Schiewer said.

"We're used to a little more pressed-man (coverage), and their philosophy with their two defensive ends is to get pressure on the quarterback, and they want to bait you into passing."

Jackson is third on the all-time WAC list for interceptions with 18 picks as a junior and leads the Colorado State charts.

"He makes plays," Schiewer said. "He reminds me a lot of Chris. I think Chris is probably a better player than he is, but this guy has the ability to make a lot of big plays. He's got good hands, and he's got good cover skills."

Myers, on the other hand, is a physical strong safety (six-foot two-inches, 191 pounds) but is a solid tackler who just doesn't make the big hits. Myers also has the WAC career record for punt return yardage and has returned three punts for scores this season, including one for 84 yards against San Diego State.

"What I like about him the most is that he plays hard," Snyder said. "He's got good range, he's, from what I've seen, has quickness, and he's got a burst."

"He can get to where he's going pretty fast, he can accelerate quite well, which means he can be a threat on long balls thrown near him, and he can get to the line of scrimmage to support the run."

A win over Colorado State would send K-State's 19 seniors out on a more positive note than last year's seniors, who departed college football with the Aloha Bowl on their minds.

"We don't have anything to prove, but by the same token, it's in the back of our minds," Johnson said. "It's a constant reminder of what happened last year."

5 keys to a Wildcat victory

Ryan O'Halloran
contributing writer

1. Protect Miller

It's no coincidence that when the offensive line struggled mightily against Oklahoma State and Nebraska at midseason, the Cats had to come from behind to beat the Pokes and, the next week, got demolished by the Huskers. Giving Miller time to find his receivers — who will get open eventually, even against Colorado State's great secondary — will be key.

The running game was great against Kansas, lousy against Oklahoma, so-so against Iowa State, and average against Colorado — and, therefore, not to be counted on. But if Miller starts to hit open receivers, it could be a long night for the Rams.

2. Contain Myers and Smith

Even if the Cats do a great job of containing defensive end Brady Smith and strong safety Greg Myers, they will get their stops. But it'll be important for the Cats to make sure they don't get their big stops on short second and third-down situations. If K-State can put together some drives and limit the effect of Smith and Myers, the Cats will be able to move the ball.

3. Go after a punt early

If the K-State pins the Rams' offense deep in its own territory early in the game, look for the Cats to send everything but the stove at the CSU punter. K-State goes after at least one punt per game, and getting an early block will set the tone for the game.

4. Rattle Moreno early

Moreno has made only four career starts in college, and there would be nothing better for K-State than Tim Colston or Percell Gaskins popping the young signal caller in the month early in the game. A few early sacks — or even some knock-downs — will certainly rattle Moreno.

5. Score early

Like most teams, if K-State takes an early lead, it gives the defense more room for error and, thus, more room to take chances. A quick K-State strike means the Cats can go after Moreno and do what they best — attack the opponent.

For 19 people, the Holiday Bowl will mean much more than an end of the 1995 K-State football season. For them, it will mean the end of an era — their collegiate football careers.

Nineteen members of the K-State football team will dress in royal purple jerseys for the last time Dec. 29 in San Diego. Nine offensive and nine defensive players, as well as one special-teams player, will return to Wagner Field next season only as fans.

Here are some year-end statistics on each of the seniors, and — as an added bonus — a few thoughts from some of them.

On the offense:

■ Quarterback Matt Miller was doubted by many fans in the preseason but proved his ability and stamina as a quarterback throughout the season. Miller finished his final year as a Wildcat with 2,059 passing yards and a school-record 22 touchdowns. But what made Miller a second-team All-Big 8 player was his ability to run the ball. Miller rushed 129 times in the season for a gain of 309 yards, averaging 28.1 yards per game.

"I want to thank the fans for everything they've done for us this year," Miller said. "They'll never know what they do for us getting us pumped up for a game."

■ Wide receiver Tyson Schwieger finished the regular season with 39 receptions for 438 yards, including a season-best, 31-yard reception against Northern Illinois. He averaged 39.8 yards per game as part of K-State's three-pronged receiving corps that included Mitch Running and junior Kevin Lockett. Schwieger also received for three touchdowns this season.

"This game means a lot, because it's the last game I'll get to play with all my friends," Schwieger said. "Talking to Chad (May), he told me to appreciate my last year. Being in the pros is different from college because everyone has their own life with wives and families. Team unity is much more strong in college."

■ Wide receiver Mitch Running started every game this season and pulled in 51 receptions for 756 yards. He averaged 14.8 yards per reception, 68.7 per game. His longest reception was also the team's longest — 49 yards in the regular-season ending loss to Colorado. Running's contribution to the team did not stop only at the receiver slot. Snyder also utilized Running's ability in special teams. The senior was the Wildcats' primary punt returner as he returned punts 34 times this season, averaging 10.9 yards per return.

■ Also leaving the Wildcat squad are wide receivers Todd Hlasney and Tony Roberts. While Roberts saw no playing time for the Cats, Hlasney appeared in two games, including the Wildcat victory over Northern Illinois. In that game, he had one of his two receptions of the year, for 8 yards.

■ Tight end Brian Lojka saw action in eight games this season, starting six of them. He caught the ball 11 times this season for 161 yards, including a 26-yard return against Oklahoma. Lojka scored four touchdowns this year.

■ Outside tackles Chris Oltmanns and Scott Heun also will not be returning to the team next year. The talents of Oltmanns and Heun allowed the K-State offense to record 4,419 yards and 49 touchdowns for the season, an average of 401.7 yards per game.

■ Fullback Dederick Kelly played in only seven games this season, starting six of those. His effect on the team was not only leadership, as Kelly was one of the team's co-captains. He surprised opposing defenses on occasion when Miller chose him as the receiver or rusher in a play. Kelly Coach Bill Snyder and senior wide receiver Tyson Schwieger embrace before Schwieger's final home game as a Wildcat, Nov. 18, 1995.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

had one reception for 18 yards against Nebraska and rushed eight times for a gain of 13 yards. His longest run was a 4-yarder against Colorado.

■ Although he did not see action this season, long snapper Kelby Helwig will also not be returning to the Wildcat locker room next season.

On the defense:

■ Big 8 Defensive Player of the Year Tim Colston had 81 tackles for the season, 53 of those unassisted, helping him earn second-team, all-America honors from the Associated Press and United Press International. Starting all but one game, the defensive tackle also broke through the opponents' defense for seven quarterback sacks and five tackles-for-loss.

■ Defensive tackle Ray Eagle, who started all 11 games, had 38 tackles, six quarterback sacks and one tackle for a loss.

■ Defensive tackle Rick Bush, who saw action in four games, will not be playing in San Diego due to a knee injury. He finished his K-State career with one forced fumble and four tackles for the season.

"I'm excited about the bowl game, because it's so close to home," Bush said. "It's a huge game that will give us a chance to end with a 10-win season and go out on a great note."

■ Linebacker Percell Gaskins was instrumental in the K-State defense that ranked No. 1 in the nation for the majority of the season, earning him a place on the AP all-America third-team. Always ready to pump the crowd, Gaskins had a team-high 97 tackles, two quarterback sacks and six tackles-for-loss this season. He also forced two fumbles and recovered one. Tack onto that one interception.

■ Defensive end Dirk Ochs started all 11 games for the Cats and racked up 61 tackles for the Cats. He also led the team in quarterback sacks with 11 for 69 yards. Ochs also had the team-high tackles-for-loss with seven for a loss of 24 yards.

"The Holiday Bowl game means quite a bit. It's the last time I'll get a chance to play as a Wildcat," Ochs said. "But I'm looking at it as a fun challenge."

■ Defensive end Matt McEwen was never a starter this season for the Cats but in nine games was a key component to the K-State defense. With 13 tackles and three tackles-for-loss, McEwen also had one fumble recovery.

"The fans have done a great job this year. I think they've grown and matured with the football team," McEwen said. "With the success, they've gotten into the game more and gotten more out of it."

■ Strong safety Chuck Marlowe, an 11-game starter, had 85 tackles this season and four tackles-for-loss. One forced fumble, one fumble recovery, one blocked punt and one safety round out Marlowe's statistics for the year.

■ Starting only the first game of the season against Temple, strong safety Steve Hanks had two interceptions on the season. Add to that 28 tackles and one quarterback sack.

On special teams:

■ Cornerback Gordon Brown's presence on the team was felt this season. He had a 17-yard touchdown return from a blocked punt by Clyde Johnson against Oklahoma. Brown also blocked a punt this season in addition to eight tackles, six of those unassisted.

Colorado State earns second-straight bowl bid

Ryan O'Halloran
contributing writer

In the days following K-State's acceptance of a Holiday Bowl berth, several teams were listed as possible opponents for the Cats Dec. 29 in San Diego. Utah, BYU and San Diego State were all banded about, but none of those teams will take the field against K-State.

It will be Colorado State who will battle the purple. The Rams (8-3) won a second-straight berth to the Holiday Bowl by virtue of a tiebreaker after a win over San Diego State.

"It's hard to mask the excitement of the athletic department," third-year CSU coach Sonny Lubick said.

"We're so happy as coaches to think this was possible, and to pull this off two years in a row is very exciting."

When the Rams arrive in San Diego for the third time in a year, they will bring an experienced and talented defensive unit, but an offense engineered by sophomore quarterback Moses Moreno.

"In terms of evaluating Colorado State, from what I see, they are a vastly improved football team over the course of the year," K-State coach Bill Snyder said.

"They're a team that has gotten better as the season has progressed — a team that, because of that, is very well-coached and fundamentally sound."

Offensively, Moreno has seen action in 19 games but started the last two contests and three of the last five. Snyder expects Moreno to play, although junior college transfer Daren Wilkinson could see action.

"The indication is that Moreno will be the quarterback, and until we see differently, that's what we would anticipate," Snyder said.

"But we'll try to prepare for both of them, yet they both have similar games."

Moreno completed 15 of 26 for 247 yards against San Diego State but has thrown 11 interceptions this season.

"He plays with quite a bit of confidence, and the thing that you have more concerns over about is that he's a young guy who was thrown into the mix partway through the season and so obviously, he was not as well prepared earlier in the season or he would have been the No. 1 guy," Snyder said. "Just like their football team, I see him getting better and better as the season went along."

The best defense in the nation will also have to contend with running back E. J. Watson and receiver Paul Turner.

Watson rushed for 1,360 yards in his first two seasons and has run for 885 yards and seven touchdowns this son. He missed the second-to-last regular season game against Hawaii and thus played sparingly against San Diego State. He rushed for more than 100 yards in five games this season, and the Rams have won all five contests.

Turner made 28 catches in each of the last two seasons and has answered that with 41 catches for 678 yards and nine touchdowns this season.

"Offensively, they have gone back and forth with their quarterbacks. But both of them are very capable, have ability, understand the offense and don't take sacks," Snyder said. "They're a team that wants to establish the run, but they have good balance."

With the bowl experience being new to the Rams last season, Lubick said the team wasn't focused enough on the job at hand.

"Now that we're going out for the second time, we'll be more focused," he said.

Offensive line seeks redemption

Shane McCormick
staff writer

After last season's Aloha Bowl loss to Boston College, many pointed fingers at the offensive line for its performance. The Boston College defense introduced itself to quarterback Chad May all day. As a result, the K-State offensive line received much of the criticism.

Even though the Aloha Bowl is still in the minds of the offensive line, its members have done everything possible to make people forget about it.

"It's been on our mind since the end of the Aloha Bowl," junior center Jason Johnson said.

"We have wanted to prove all season that we are a better team than that. We are going to do everything in our power to prevent that from happening this year at the Holiday Bowl."

Senior offensive tackle Chris Oltmanns agreed.

"It's not something that you can just forget, he said. "It sticks with you for a while."

But Oltmanns said this year the Cats are going into the Holiday Bowl

MILLER

"I've been trying to get back, but I'm so busy. I've got football in the fall and baseball in the spring, and I spend my summers getting ready for football again. There just hasn't been any time to go back. I'm real excited."

Miller said the opportunity to play for his old high school football coaches will be exciting for him.

"They've been real supportive during my college career," he said. "They told me to keep hanging in there, before I began starting at quarterback. Now that I'm there, they're happy for me and glad to see me doing well with a Top 10 team."

Miller didn't come straight to Manhattan after leaving San Diego. Instead, he chose to attend Texas A&M, where he redshirted his first season. But that is perhaps where he received a lot of his football education. Miller was the starting scout team quarterback and played against the Texas A&M defense. At that time, the Aggies' defense was ranked No. 1 in the nation.

Miller played one more year before leaving College Station for Manhattan. In that season, he played in only two games and did not attempt a pass.

That's where his story with the Wildcats begins. In 1993, Miller sat out a year after transferring from Texas A&M, following NCAA regulations.

Last season, Miller played back-up for former K-State quarterback Chad May. In that position, he appeared in eight games, completing four-of-12 passes for 37 yards.

But his statistics have changed. As the No. 1 quarterback for the 1995 Wildcats, Miller finished his career at K-State as the third-leading rusher for the Cats with 309 yards in 129 attempts.

And records broken? Miller now heads the record book for most touchdowns in a season with 30, breaking May's record of 23 set in 1993. Twenty-two of those touchdowns were passes, also a K-State record for a season. The previous record of 18 was also by May.

Miller said aside from the Holiday Bowl, he is looking forward to spending time at his favorite beach in San Diego, Del Mar beach.

"I'm a real beach bum," he said. "I just can't wait to get back there."

What San Diego has to offer

Shana Newell
staff writer

When K-State fans converge on San Diego for the Holiday Bowl, their minds will most likely be on the football game. But for some, the simple chance for a vacation from the unpredictability of Kansas weather will be of paramount importance.

"When we go to San Diego, I'm going to enjoy the nice weather more than anything," Sarah Jeffries, sophomore in psychology, said. "The sunshine is the main reason I'm going."

Because of this desire for warmer weather, fans will seek activities to fill their time while waiting for game time.

A plethora of sightseeing activities await the purple people. Perhaps the most well-known of these is the world-famous San Diego Zoo.

The zoo is open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. year-round, including Christmas Day. According to information obtained from the park's information hotline, (619) 239-0512, adults are charged $15 at the gate, while children ages 3-11 years are admitted for $6. Children younger than 2 are admitted free. This fee includes admission to the zoo, the children's zoo, and all shows and exhibits.

There are packages available for visitors interested in a guided bus tour and/or a Ski-fari aerial tram ride.

After a day spent at the zoo with land animals, visitors can visit Sea World of San Diego and watch Shamu and his friends perform tricks for audiences.

"I am definitely going to go to Sea World," Jeffries said. "I have never been there and am not going to miss this opportunity."

Sea World is also open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. every day this year, including Christmas Day. From Dec. 26-31, the park will remain open for an additional hour.

According to information obtained from the Sea World information line, (619) 226-3901, admission is $29.95 for adults and $21.95 for children ages 3-11 years.

"I also wouldn't mind taking a day and just shop, but I don't really know where to go," Jeffries said.

For those San Diego visitors who are more content to relax and shop, Old Town San Diego State Historic Park is an excellent way to spend time.

Located in the heart of San Diego, Old Town is open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. every day said Victoria Long, a California park superintendent.

"Old town has several museums for visitors to walk through," she said. "Then there are a variety of restaurants that serve breakfast, lunch and dinner."

Traveling K-State fans can contact their travel agent for even more points of interest in San Diego.

The biggest attraction, however, might be the easiest to find.

"Of course I'll have to go to the beach," Jeffries said. "I couldn't go to California and not go to the beach."

Because San Diego is right on the coast, there are plenty of sandy beaches for visitors, including Mission Beach, Black's Beach, Pacific Beach and La Jolla.

"Most of the beach areas are easy to find," said Linda Blackstone of the San Diego Visitors Bureau and Convention Center.

LINE

with a different attitude.

"Last year, we really talked too much at the Aloha Bowl. We were too concerned about what bowl games we should have been in," Oltmanns said.

"This year, we have a better attitude going into the game," he said. "We are concentrating on the game we are at."

One of the main adjustments for the offensive line this year has been with the change of quarterbacks.

Last season with Chad May at quarterback, the offensive line knew what May was going to do — pass the ball. May was not a threat to run the ball.

But with Matt Miller leading the team, the offensive line has had to make adjustments.

"With Chad back there, you really didn't have to worry what he was going to do because he really didn't do too much running," sophomore guard Kendyl Jacox said. "With Matt back there, you got keep going, stay on your blocks, because you never know where he is going to be."

The same could be said about Jacox this year. Because he plays so many positions, opposing defenses don't know where Jacox will be lined up.

The talented sophomore has established himself as one of the most versatile linemen in the Big 8. This season, Jacox has rotated between both guard spots and filled in for an injured Johnson at center.

"He has the capacity to do a lot of things for us, and this year, we have utilized him when given the opportunity," Coach Bill Snyder said.

"Because I get a lot of reps at each position during practice, it really hasn't been too difficult," Jacox said. "It is more mental than anything else."

One of the match ups to look for on the field in San Diego will be Colorado State's Brady Smith against Wildcat Chris Oltmanns.

Smith set a new career sack record for the Western Athletic Conference this season, with 27. Smith recorded 15 of those this season, setting a single-season record.

Oltmanns said he is looking toward the match up.

"He is probably as good — if not better — than anyone I have faced this season in the Big 8," he said. "He is a terrific pass rusher with great moves. He reminds me a lot of our defensive end, Dirk Ochs."

"It will be a great challenge for me."

One thing the Cats' offensive line has going for it this year is its depth.

Numerous times this season, the Cats have been able to rotate different linemen into the game.

"I think our depth has been our greatest strength," Oltmanns said. "We are capable of rotating different people in and having them do positive things for us."

Through the ups and downs this season, one thing has stayed the same for the offensive line. It has remained a close group, much like a family.

"We have really come together this season as a unit," Johnson said. "We are a really close group, we play as a unit, and we have a lot of guys rotating in on that unit," Johnson said.

And there is only one thing this unit said it wanted for Christmas.

"All we want is a victory in the Holiday Bowl," Oltmanns said.
